DEAR SIR:

I herewith transmit and recommend for publication the volume entitled Minutes of the Court of Rensselaerswyck, April 2, 1648 to April 15, 1652, translated and edited by A. J. F. van Laer, Archivist of the Division of Archives and History.

In point of view of date this volume precedes the Minutes of the Court of Fort Orange and Beverwyck already published. Reference to the preface by the translator and editor will show the position which these minutes occupy in relation to the previous publication. Their importance in giving a picture of the legal, institutional and economic conditions of the time has already been called to your attention in the volume to which reference has been made.

Very truly yours

PREFACE

The court of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, whose minutes for 1648–1652 are published herewith, formed from an early date an important part of the judicial organization of the province of New Netherland. The court was erected by Kiliaen van Rensselaer by virtue of the power conferred upon him by the charter of Freedoms and Exemptions of 1629, which provided that members of the Dutch West India Company who within four years after giving notice to the company should plant in New Netherland a colony of fifty adults should be acknowledged as patroons and should hold their land from the company as a perpetual fief of inheritance, with “high, middle and low jurisdiction.” By these terms the patroons were authorized to administer civil and criminal justice, in person or by deputy, within the limits of their respective colonies and to erect courts whose jurisdiction should extend to matters affecting life and limb, although article 20 of the charter provided that from all judgments given by the courts of the patroons above 50 guilders there should be appeal to the director general and council of New Netherland.¹

The first step to organize a court in the colony of Rensselaerswyck was taken by the patroon on July 1, 1632, when he appointed Rutger Hendricksz van Soest schout and empowered him to administer the oath of schepenen to Roelof Jansz van ¹This appeal applied only to judgments in civil cases. According to the Dutch criminal procedure of that period, conviction was had only upon confession by the criminal, extorted by torture, if necessary. From sentences rendered upon such conviction there was no appeal. The right of appeal was largely nullified by a pledge which the patroon exacted from the colonists not to appeal to the supreme court of New Netherland. Kieft and afterwards also Stuyvesant held that this was an infringement of the charter, but the patroon, in a letter to Kieft, dated May 29, 1640, maintained that a clause to that effect was inserted in the contracts with the colonists merely for the purpose of preventing them from wasting their time and money in needless litigation. See Van Rensselaer Bowier Mss., p. 476, and Doc. rel. to Col. Hist. N. Y., 1:423.

Masterland, Gerrit Theusz de Reus, Maryn Adriaensz, Brant Peelen and Laurens Laurensz, all of whom, with the exception of de Reus, were then residing in the colony. The patroon issued instructions for the schout and schepens on July 20, 1632, and sent these to the colony by his nephew Wouter van Twiller, the newly appointed director general of New Netherland, who also took with him a silver plated rapier with baldric and a hat with plumes for the schout, and black hats with silver bands for the schepens.

Van Twiller sailed from the island of Texel, on the ship "Soutberg," shortly after July 27, 1632, and arrived at New Amsterdam in April of the following year. He had with him a power of attorney from Kiliaen van Rensselaer to administer the oath of schout to Rutger Hendricksz van Soest, but as far as can be judged from the meager information that is available did not administer the oath.

Conditions, just then, were not favorable for the erection of a court in the colony. Differences had arisen in the board of directors of the Dutch West India Company in regard to the fur trade and efforts were made by those who were opposed to the agricultural colonization of New Netherland to deprive the patroons of the privileges granted to them by the charter of Freedoms and Exemptions. Van Rensselaer complains of this in a memorial presented by him to the Assembly of the XIX on November 25, 1633,¹ in which he makes the statement that in July, 1632, he had people and animals enough to start five farms, but that his efforts were frustrated because the Company refused to let him have carpenters, smiths and other mechanics and also declined to furnish his people with supplies, in exchange for grain and dairy products.

Taking this statement in connection with the facts that Rutger Hendricksz' term of service as a farmer was about to expire and that his name does not appear in the records of the colony after 1634, it seems safe to conclude that when Van Twiller arrived in New Netherland Rutger Hendricksz had determined to leave the colony and declined to accept the position of schout.

Van Twiller wrote to the patroon and recommended Brant Aertsz van Slichtenhorst for the post,¹ but before his letter was received the patroon had already made other arrangements and entered into a contract with Jacob Albertsz Planck, whereby the latter was engaged as schout for the period of three years. Planck received his instructions on April 27, 1634, and soon after sailed for the colony, where he arrived on or just before the 12th of August. His instructions provided that on his arrival in New Netherland he was to present himself before Director Van Twiller and to request him to administer to him the oath of office "instead of to Rutger Henrickssz, according to previous power of attorney" and, furthermore, that at the first opportunity he was to choose three schepens from among the fittest of the colonists, so that he could hold court if need be. Presumably, therefore, the court of the colony was first organized shortly after August 12, 1634.

The court as then constituted corresponded to the usual courts of schout and schepens as they at that time existed in most of the manors of the Netherlands. It was evidently intended to be a court of limited civil and criminal jurisdiction, for the patroon, in a letter to Wouter van Twiller, dated April 23, 1634, distinctly states that Michiel Pauw, in his colony of Pavonia, calls Cornelis van Vorst his "chief officer," but that for his own reasons he desires that "Jacob Planck shall as yet not be otherwise entitled than as officer," thereby indicating, it seems, that he was not to have the rank of a city schout, or the presiding officer of a superior court having power to inflict capital punishment.²

Planck not only held the position of schout, but also that of commies, or trading agent and administrative officer of the colony. His services were not satisfactory, so that at the expiration of his term, in August 1637, he was not reappointed. The patroon, however, had difficulty in finding a suitable successor and requested Planck to remain until the arrival of Arent van Curler, who was sent out as his assistant in the latter part of December of that year. Planck was back in Holland in August 1639, and probably left the colony shortly after May 12th, when the patroon wrote to Director General Kieft: "I am negotiating about sending some people of capacity to my colony, but they were not able to make up their minds so quickly and to get ready, and in the former officer, Jacob Planck, I do not find a proper manager. He knows more about trading furs, which have been of greater profit to him than to me; however, I wish to part with him in friendship and not to give the least occasion for dissatisfaction among my people, for they stir one another up." Having failed to find a successor to Planck, the patroon, the same day, entrusted the administration of justice and the general management of the colony to three gecommitteerden, or commissioners, namely, Arent van Curler, Pieter Cornelisz van Munnickendam and Cornelis Teunisz van Breuckelen. Of these, the first was made secretary and bookkeeper of the colony and until further order was also to act as officer and commies, the second was made receiver of tithes and supercargo of the vessel, and the third was appointed the patroon's voorspraecke, or attorney, to defend his interests. These three commissioners managed the affairs of the colony until the arrival of Adriaen van der Donck, who was commissioned officer of justice on May 13, 1641. Just how long Van der Donck held the post of officer is not known. He arrived in the colony in August 1641, and like Planck and other officials of the colony was probably appointed for a period of three years, so that his term of office would seem to have expired in August 1644.¹

Just about this time word must have reached the colony of the death of the patroon. An entry in the minutes of the director general and council of New Netherland under date of August 8, 1644,¹ in which reference is made to "the heirs of Mr Renselaer, deceased," shows, namely, that Kiliaen van Rensselaer died, not in 1646, as stated by O'Callaghan, Brodhead and all other writers, but some time prior to August 1644, and perhaps as early as the fall of 1643, when the patroon's letters to the colony, published in the Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, ceased.

The patroon's estate and title now descended to his eldest son, Johannes, who, being a minor, was with his property placed under the guardianship of his uncle Johan van Wely and his cousin Wouter van Twiller. Upon these guardians, therefore, devolved the duty of appointing a successor to Van der Donck. The latter had been lax in the performance of his duties, so that many abuses had sprung up in the colony and a firmer hand was needed in dealing with the colonists. The man chosen for this purpose was Brant Aertsz van Slichtenhorst, the same person who in 1633 had been recommended by Van Twiller for the position of schout of the colony.

Van Slichtenhorst was appointed director of the colony on November 10, 1646, but before this appointment was made, Van der Donck had already left the colony and Nicolaes Coorn, the commander of Rensselaers-Steyn, a small fort on Beeren Island, at the southern entrance to the colony, had taken his place. Coorn acted as officer of the colony until Van Slichtenhorst's arrival in March 1648, but was then given the title of Officier Luytenant, or deputy sheriff, and made Van Slichtenhorst's assistant, in which capacity he was soon succeeded by the latter's nephew, Gerrit van Wenckum.

Of the records of the court, from its organization in 1634 to the end of Nicolaes Coorn's term as officer, nothing has been preserved and little is known of what actually happened in the colony beyond what may be gathered from the patroon's correspondence, which stops in 1643.

Several facts, however, are known which show, not only that court was held between 1643 and 1648, but that during or even before this period the court had ceased to be a court of limited civil and criminal jurisdiction. One of these facts is that on February 4, 1644, and again on August 28, 1647, sentence of banishment was pronounced on Willem Jeuriaensz; another, that on August 13, 1644, a similar sentence was pronounced on Adriaen Willemsz; and still another that, apparently in 1646, Wolf Nyssen, a native of Fulda, in Hessen,¹ was executed for a crime which is not mentioned in the accounts. This execution is the only case of capital punishment in the colony of which we have any record. The sentence was carried out by a negro named Jan, who received 38 guilders for the task. The name of the negro does not appear in the account books of the colony except under the date mentioned above. It is probable that he was a slave belonging to the Company, who had been hired for the special purpose, for on March 9, 1643, in connection with the arrest of refractory colonists, the patroon wrote to Van der Donck: "I am almost thinking of asking some of the negroes (with consent of the honorable Director Kieft) or even to employ for your assistance some Indian of good courage and obedience who would then also be of service to you in other things."²

Van Slichtenhorst, as already stated, was appointed on November 10, 1646. He received his instructions and took the ² Van Rensselaer Bowier Mss., p. 642. September 27, 1646, a slave named Jan Francisco, the younger, was manumitted by the director general and council of New Netherland at the request of Domine Megapolensis. oath of office on September 4, 1647,¹ and on the 26th of the same month sailed for his post. He landed in Virginia on December 12th, thence proceeded by another ship to Manhattan, which he reached on February 7, 1648, and finally arrived in the colony on March 22d. Van Slichtenhorst was then 59 years of age.² He was born at Nykerck, in the province of Gelderland, where his ancestral estate, known as the Aert-Brantsgoed, extending on both sides of the Slichtenhorst road, adjoined the property of the Van Twillers and was situated not far from Corlaer, the original seat of the Van Curlers. Thus, long before his coming to New Netherland, he must have been well acquainted with both Wouter van Twiller and Arent van Curler, the latter of whom was at the time of his appointment in Holland and returned with him to New Netherland.

Van Slichtenhorst married early in January 1614, at Nykerck, Aeltje van Wenckum, a distant relative of Kiliaen van Rensselaer, by whom he had nine children, namely, four sons and five daughters, of whom Arend, the historian of Gelderland, and a daughter Goudje, or Hillegonda, remained in Holland. A younger daughter, Margaret, and his son Gerrit³ accompanied him to New Netherland, and the other children died young. He was a deacon of the Dutch Reformed Church at Nykerck from Beernink, De Geschiedschrijver en Rechtsgeleerde Dr. Arend van Slichtenhorst en zijn vader Brant van Slichtenhorst, Stichter van Albany, Hoofdstad van den Staat New-York (Werken uitgegeven door de Vereeniging Gelre, No. 12), Arnhem, 1916, p. 155-64.

² According to Mr Beernink, Van Slichtenhorst was on January 1, 1656 more than 67 years old, and in 1664, 76 years of age. See his biography, p. 216, 255.

1619 to 1622, and from 1621 to 1627 was subcollector at the same place for Joncker Carel Bentinck ten Berencamp, one of the representatives of the nobility of the district of the Veluwe, who held the lucrative office of collector or receiver.

Van Slichtenhorst's name first appears in connection with New Netherland under date of June 25, 1632, when he was appointed commissary of stores by the Amsterdam Chamber of the Dutch West India Company.¹ He was to sail in that capacity to New Netherland in the company of Director Wouter van Twiller, but was unexpectedly detained by his former employer, Bentinck, owing to a litigation in which the latter was involved with the inhabitants of Nykerck. Having, in view of his appointment, already disposed of his property at Nykerck, Van Slichtenhorst first removed to Harderwyck,² where his son Arend attended the university, but soon after changed his residence to the city of Amersfoort, where from 1636 to 1644 he held the position of lieutenant schout, and where he remained until his departure for New Netherland in 1647. Before coming to New Netherland, therefore, Van Slichtenhorst had considerable experience, both as an administrative officer and as deputy schout.

His contract with the guardians of the young patroon provided that he was to hold the positions of hoofd-officier and director of the colony for the period of three years from the date of his arrival in the colony. As hoofd-officier, he was to preside over the court, to act as public prosecutor and to perform the combined duties of a modern sheriff and chief of police. As director, he was the chief administrative officer of the colony and as such was to collect the patroon's revenues derived from farms, mills, licenses to trade, etc., of which he was to render a strict account, ¹For a facsimile of this commission and a printed copy of the text, see Beernink, p. 69, 77.

with the understanding, however, that he was not to engage in the fur trade, or to act as commies. For the performance of these various duties he was to receive a salary of 900 guilders a year, of which 150 guilders were to be paid in Holland to his daughter Hillegonda, who shortly after his departure married at Nykerck Pieter van der Schuer. In addition to this salary, Van Slichtenhorst was to receive one third of the fines and the proceeds from confiscated property, above the amount of ten guilders; below that amount, he was to have the entire sum, provided that one half was to go the deputy schout. As a third source of income, he was to have the toepachten, or fees paid in addition to the annual rent and tithes of the farms.

The contract further provided that with his daughter Margaret, his son Gerrit, and his nephew Gerrit van Wenckum, the director was to enjoy free passage and board to New Netherland¹ and that in addition he should receive 150 guilders for moving expenses. After his arrival in the colony, he was to have, rent free, the house and garden formerly occupied by the commies, Arent van Curler, and, furthermore, four cows and two horses on shares, 8 acres of plowed land and as much pasture as was needed for the horses and cattle. Finally, he was to receive 5 per cent of the profits of the trade which the guardians expected to carry on between Amsterdam and New Netherland, but in regard to which they at that time did not wish to commit themselves definitely.

Van Slichtenhorst's instructions, dated September 4, 1647, consisted of 24 articles. They provided in substance that upon his arrival at the island of Manhattan he was to present his respects to the director general and deliver to him a letter from the guardians of the patroon. At the first opportunity he was to proceed to the colony, call upon Domine Megapolensis, make known his official capacity and ask his advice in regard to the administration and redress of the colony. He was then to present his commission to the council, thank the members for their services and summon Anthony de Hooges and Abraham Staets, in order to notify them of their appointment as gecommitteerden by the patroon. He was furthermore to make regulations for the proper observance of the "Sabbath of the New Testament," to enforce the contracts and the ordinances, to collect the revenues, and to attend to the proper administration of justice, taking care not to keep persons for a long time in detention at the expense of the colony, but to bring them speedily to trial and, whenever required, to inform the court of the names of the persons who were in custody and the cause of their arrest.

The court as organized by Van Slichtenhorst consisted at first of four and afterwards of five persons, of whom two were designated as gecommitteerden, or commissioners, and two, or afterwards three, are in the record indiscriminately referred to as raden, raetspersonen, gerechtspersonen, or rechtsvrienden. The duties of the gecommitteerden were primarily of an administrative nature, while those of the raden, contrary to what one might expect from the title, seem to have been chiefly judicial. The gecommitteerden represented the patroon and acted under definite instructions from the guardians. The raden, on the other hand, were appointed by the director, but represented the colonists, it being at that time held sufficient if persons who were to represent others were chosen from among them, so as to represent their class. The only requirement was that they should not be in the patroon's service. Goossen Gerritsz made a point of this on October 22, 1648, when as one of the reasons for his being unable to accept the office of gerechtspersoon he stated that he was "not yet on a free basis with the patroon." The objection, however, was overruled, so that he was obliged to serve.

The members of the court were as a rule chosen from among the most prominent residents of the colony. De Hooges, one of the first commissioners, had been sent out in 1641 as assistant to Arent van Curler. Upon the latter's departure for the Netherlands, in October 1644, he was put in charge of the colony and given the title of commies. After the arrival of Van Slichtenhorst, he became secretary of the colony, a position which he occupied until his death in October 1655. Staets was a surgeon and trader, who came to the colony in 1642. He held the office of raetspersoon from February 5, 1643, to April 10, 1644, and from the latter date to April 10, 1648, was Presideerende, or presiding officer of the council. As gecommitteerde, he was before June 5, 1649, succeeded by Jan van Twiller, whose place in turn, on January 5, 1651, was taken by Arent van Curler. The office of raet, or gerechtspersoon, was held by such men as Andries de Vos, Rutger Jacobsz van Schoonderwoert, Goossen Gerritsz van Schaick, Jan Verbeeck and Pieter Hertgers, all of whom were prominent members of the community, and who afterwards became members of the court of Fort Orange and Beverwyck.

The proceedings of the court presided over by Van Slichtenhorst cover the period from April 2, 1648, to April 15, 1652. They form the most important source for the history of the colony during that period, but unfortunately add but little to what is known from other sources in regard to the outstanding event of that period, namely, the controversy between Van Slichtenhorst and General Peter Stuyvesant regarding the jurisdiction of the territory around Fort Orange, which forms one of the dramatic episodes of the history of New Netherland. As is well known, this controversy had its origin in the claim made by the patroon, as early as 1632, that "all the lands lying on the west side of the river, from Beyren Island to Moeneminnes Castle," . . . "even including the place where Fort Orange stands,"¹ had been bought and paid for by him. The Dutch West India Company, on the other hand, maintained that the territory of the fort, which was erected several years before the land of the colony was purchased from the Indians, belonged to the Company and consequently was not included in the patroon's purchase. The question had remained unsettled during the lifetime of Kiliaen van Rensselaer, but came to an issue when Van Slichtenhorst, soon after his arrival in the colony, began to issue permits for the erection of houses in the immediate vicinity of the fort. Stuyvesant objected to the erection of these houses on the ground that they endangered the security of the fort and ordered the destruction of all buildings within range of cannon shot, a distance at first reckoned at 600 geometrical paces of 5 feet to the pace, but which afterwards was reduced to 150 Rhineland rods.¹ The order called forth a vigorous protest from Van Slichtenhorst, who regarded it as an unwarranted invasion of the patroon's rights, and he proceeded with the erection of the buildings. A counter protest followed and in 1651 charges were brought against Van Slichtenhorst, who was summoned to appear before the director general and council at Manhattan and there detained for 4 months. The controversy continued after his return, but was definitely settled on April 10, 1652, when a proclamation, drawn up by the director general and council of New Netherland on the 8th of the same month, was issued in the colony for the erection of a separate court for Fort Orange, independent of that of the colony.

The erection of this court was a serious blow to the colony of Rensselaerswyck, from which it never fully recovered. By virtue of this proclamation, the main settlement of the colony, which was known as the Fuyck, but which in the court record is generally referred to as the byeenwoninge, or hamlet, was taken out of the jurisdiction of the patroon and erected into an independent village by the name of Beverwyck, which afterwards became the city of Albany.² As a result of this action, the jurisdiction of the court of the colony was thereafter confined to the sparsely settled outlying districts of the colony, so that the cases which came before it must have been very few. No consecutive judicial record of the court of the colony after April 15, 1652, has been preserved, but entries in the minutes of the court of Beverwyck indicate that the court of the colony continued to hold sessions.

² The directors of the West India Company afterwards repudiated Stuyvesant's action and on April 2, 1674, declared: "That the abovenamed Patroon Renselaer and co-partners have been already, from the year XVI^c and thirty, and are true owners of the abovenamed

Van Slichtenhorst vigorously protested against the erection of the court of Fort Orange and Beverwyck and with his own hands tore down the proclamation which had been posted on the house of the patroon. For this he was arrested on April 18, 1652, and taken to Manhattan, where he was detained until August 1653. With his arrest, Van Slichtenhorst's administration came to a close. On July 24, 1652, he was succeeded as director by Jan Baptist van Rensselaer¹ and as officer of justice by Gerard Swart, so that thereafter the two functions were no longer combined in one person. The latter had been commissioned schout on April 24, 1652,² and continued to hold this position until 1665, when by order of Governor Richard Nicolls the court of the colony was consolidated with that of Fort Orange and the village of Beverwyck. The year 1665 therefore marks the end of the existence of the first local court that was organized in the province of New Netherland, outside of New Amsterdam.

Van Slichtenhorst returned to the Netherlands shortly after July 1655 and took up his residence with his daughter Hillegonda, who at Nykerck had married Pieter van der Schuer.

hamlet named Beverwyck or Willemstadt, and that the possession by their late Director could not take away nor diminish said ownership; declaring, therefore, that the abovenamed Company has no right, action nor pretension thereto, leaving the right of ownership in the abovenamed Patroon and associates" Doc. rel. to Col. Hist. N. Y., 2:558, 560-61.

² Swart's commission, dated April 24, 1652, and his instructions, dated May 6, 1652, are printed in O'Callaghan, History of New Netherland, 2:564-66.

Before his departure from the colony, the commissioners had approved a debit and credit account covering the years 1648–1650, which showed that for this period of his administration there was due to him from the patroon the sum of 13,799 guilders, 2 stivers and 12 pence.¹ The patroon considered this amount excessive and refused to pay it, whereupon Van Slichtenhorst brought suit against him in the district court of the Veluwe, in the province of Gelderland. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, but on an appeal taken by Van Rensselaer to the Klaarbank, or court of appeals, at Engelandersholt the decision was reversed, so that in the end the former director failed to recover any considerable amount. The case dragged on in the courts from 1656 to 1661. The following year, Van Slichtenhorst commenced a second action against the patroon, but before any decision was reached Johan van Rensselaer died and further proceedings were abandoned.

Van Slichtenhorst now turned his attention to the completion of an historical work, entitled: Hoe en wanneer Gelderlandt tot eene voogdhye is afgesondert, 878–1666, which is ascribed to his son Arend. In 1664, he became feeble minded and was no longer able to take care of his affairs. As his daughter had a large family and his condition made quieter surroundings necessary, he was placed in the home of Evert Elberts, a carpenter at Nykerck, where two years later, on or just before September 26, 1666, he died at the advanced age of 78 years.

Van Slichtenhorst is one of the few New Netherland officials of whose complete career we have any detailed knowledge. Mr Beernink sums up his character by stating that he was "a man of many-sided knowledge and great ability, of recognized ¹A translation of this account is given in the Appendix. April 4, 1652, the directors of the Dutch West India Company wrote to Stuyvesant: "From what we can learn here, the owners of the Colony of Rensselaerswyck have here come to an agreement and will probably send over another manager, but we doubt, whether they will easily get rid of Slechtenhorst, for it is said here, that he demands from the owners 14000 to 15000 guilders; we know not, how true it may be." Doc. rel. to Col. Hist. N. Y., 14:171.

integrity and proved fidelity, of rare courage and unflinching perseverance, which at times amounted to obstinacy; an untiring champion for the rights of others and of himself."¹ The present minutes of the court presided over by Van Slichtenhorst contain many personal touches which testify to his ability and devotion to duty, but the general impression left by these minutes is that he was a man of aggressive temperament and arbitrary and unyielding disposition, who frequently came into needless conflict with his associates and the colonists.

One point in connection with Van Slichtenhorst's administration on which much emphasis has been laid by Mr Beernink is worthy of special notice. On the strength of a statement made by Van Slichtenhorst in the course of his litigation with Johan van Rensselaer, that on his arrival in the colony there were but three houses standing near the fort, that by August 1648 eight houses had been built, and that at the end of his administration, in April 1652, there was a settlement of about one hundred houses, Mr Beernink calls him "the founder of Albany."² This title needs qualification, for it is well known that in 1646 and 1647 severe freshets had carried away a number of houses in the colony, so that the sudden building activity during Van Slichtenhorst's administration may mean nothing more than that people were replacing the buildings that had been lost. On the other hand, there are various indications that before 1648 the main settlement of the colony was, not on the west, but on the east side of the Hudson river, in the so-called Greenenbosch, afterwards corrupted to Greenbush, a pine grove opposite the ferry.³ It is possible, therefore, that at Van Slichtenhorst's initiative this settlement was, either for greater security, or for other reasons, gradually removed to the vicinity of Fort Orange, in which case there would be considerable justification for regarding him as the real founder of the city of Albany. It is interesting in this connection to read what Father Isaac Jogues, in his Novum Belgium, has to say about the colony. Writing in 1646, but describing conditions as he found them in 1643, he says:

“There are two things in this settlement (which is called Rensselaerswick, as if to say, settlement of Rensselaers, who is a rich Amsterdam merchant) — first, a miserable little fort called Fort Orange, built of logs, with four or five pieces of Breteuil cannon, and as many pedereros. This has been reserved and is maintained by the West India Company. This fort was formerly on an island in the river; it is now on the mainland, towards the Hiroquois, a little above the said island.

Secondly, a colony sent here by this Rensselaers, who is the patron. This colony is composed of about a hundred persons, who reside in some twenty-five or thirty houses built along the river, as each found most convenient. In the principal house lives the patron's agent; the minister has his apart, in which service is performed. There is also a kind of bailiff here, whom they call the seneschal, who administers justice. All their houses are merely of boards and thatched, with no mason work except the chimneys. The forest furnishing many large pines, they make boards by means of their mills, which they have here for the purpose.”¹

While Father Jogues does not specify whether the houses stood on the east or on the west side of the river, it is evident from his description that in 1643 there was no compact settlement around Fort Orange. It would seem therefore that what Van Slichtenhorst actually did, was to have the separate dwellings that stood on both banks of the river removed to the vicinity of the fort. Such a concentration of the settlement, for the greater security of the inhabitants, similar to that which ten years later, at Stuyvesant's suggestion, was carried out at Wiltwyck,² would satisfactorily explain the peculiar usage of the term byeenwoning, literally, “a dwelling together,” by which the hamlet is repeatedly designated in the court minutes. Mr Beernink considers the employment of this term in the sense of a village so remarkable, that he cites it as a distinct proper name, which was given to the settlement by Van Slichtenhorst, but which heretofore has been overlooked.¹ This, however, does not seem to be the case, for the name never became current outside of the locality and is not mentioned in the declaration made by the directors of the Dutch West India Company in 1674, in which they speak of "the hamlet, first called de Fuyck, afterwards Beverwyck, and now Willemstadt, whereabouts Fort Orange is built."² The use, moreover, in Arend van Slichtenhorst's defense of his father before the district court of the Veluwe, of such a phrase as eene Byeenwoeningh van omtrent honderd huysen (a settlement of about one hundred houses), cited by Mr Beernink,³ sufficiently proves that the word byeenwoninge was employed as a common noun.

As shown in the preceding pages, the minutes of the court presided over by Van Slichtenhorst form the only record of the court of the colony of Rensselaerswyck that has been preserved. The record breaks off on April 15, 1652, the very date on which the first session was held of the newly created court of Fort Orange and the village of Beverwyck. The present record, therefore, connects directly with the first book of minutes of the last named court, of which a translation has recently been published by The University of the State of New York.

The record, in its original form, was a paper covered volume of 114 leaves, which on the front cover bore the title of "Gerechtsrolle der Colonie Rensselaerswyck." It is repeatedly cited under this title in the second volume of O'Callaghan's History of New Netherland and has been used extensively in the compilation of the list of settlers of the colony which is printed at the end of the Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, but the complete text of the record has heretofore not been available in print.

³ Beernink, p. 208, 253.

The record belongs to the archives of the colony which, together with the later records of the manor of Rensselaerswyck, were for many years kept in the patroon's office, a one-story brick building with a fireproof vault, which until recently stood near the south west corner of Broadway and Tivoli street, in the northern part of the city of Albany. It was with these records, in 1899, removed to the Albany county clerk's office¹ and from there, in 1906, as part of the same collection of records, transferred to the New York State Library. There, less than 5 years later, it was severely damaged in the fire which on March 29, 1911, broke out in the western portion of the State Capitol and in a few hours destroyed not only the general contents of the Library but also many valuable records, including the greater part of the Rensselaerswyck manuscripts.

As shown by the illustrations, the lower part of the record is completely charred, the portion containing the last two or three lines of every page being severed from the rest of the manuscript and in some cases lost. Wherever possible, the writing on these charred fragments has been carefully deciphered, so that the text as here presented is to a large extent complete.

The main body of the record is in the handwriting of Anthony de Hooges, who throughout the period of Van Slichtenhorst's administration and until his own death, in 1655, held the office of secretary. Here and there, however, pages occur in another hand, which is probably that of Gerrit van Wenckum, Van Slichtenhorst's nephew, who according to the account printed in the appendix did considerable copying. Throughout the record there are many additional entries and marginal annotations by Van Slichtenhorst. In the translation no systematic effort has been made to indicate these changes of handwriting, which as a rule are without special significance.

COURT MINUTES OF RENSSELAERSWYCK

1648-1652

[1] In the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ
we begin this court record.¹

This day, Thursday, April 2 Anno 1648

Hendrick Westerkamp is granted permission and consent to support himself in the colony by day-labor or otherwise. He may therefore select a place, whereupon we shall resolve further.

Jacob Adriaenz is ordered to serve out his term with Evert Pels for the space of one year and to report to Evert Pels within four days from this date, under penalty of forfeiting, the first time four guilders, for remaining in default another four days eight guilders, and the third time sixteen guilders; and of receiving arbitrary punishment the fourth time.

Jacob Lambertz van Dorlandt having committed a crime in wounding Paulus Jansz, Noorman, and the court having heard the director's complaint in the matter, the delinquent is condemned to pay the director a fine of twenty-five guilders, with costs, [the parties] being warned hereafter to keep the peace, [under penalty of] condemnation.

[Iv] ² Thursday, April 9 Anno 1648

Whereas we observe the great rashness of Jacob Adriaenz in entering into another man's service, having been, namely, as appears from the foregoing judgment, first with Evert Pels and being now with Cornelis Segersz, which is a matter that is not to be tolerated, therefore, leaving the foregoing judgment unabated, we order that Jacob aforesaid for his rashness and in reparation of the loss which Cornelis may suffer thereby shall pay to Cornelis Segersz, inclusive of the earnest money and previous expenses, the sum of twenty-five guilders.

[2] Court proceedings, April 16 Anno 1648

At the director's demand, Quiryn Cornelisz is ordered for the last time to present before Thursday next, without further delay, further proof of his account and an accurate statement about the farm, both as to receipts and expenditures, on pain, in case he remains in default, of being placed in confinement and kept on bread and water until he shall produce further proof, and furthermore of arbitrary punishment at the discretion of the court.

Whereas the time allowed to Jacob Adriaensz expired two days ago and we find that as yet he has not reported to Evert Pels, it is ordered, as it is ordered by us hereby, that the honorable director and the court messenger shall this coming Saturday take him to his place of destination and, in case of opposition to this our order, he shall de facto be taken into custody and be put on bread and water.

Cornelis Theunisz from Breuckelen is ordered to bring in and settle his account on Wednesday next, when [] him [] forfeiture [].¹

[2v] Apostil on the petition of Nicolaes Coorn

First, as to the capacity in which he serves the honorable court, he is Lieutenant Officer.² As to his salary, the honorable court, subject to ratification by the honorable guardians,³ according to instructions, have granted him one pound Flemish in addition to his former pay for service and board, that is to say, thirty-six guilders a month.

³ Johan van Wely and Wouter van Twiller, the guardians of the young patroon, Johannes van Rensselaer, the minor son of Kiliaen van Rensselaer, deceased, then in Holland.

Secondly, as to the name of Stads Herberg (City Tavern), permission to use the same is granted him, as well as permission to build according to his request at the place to be assigned to him, provided that he enter into a proper contract for that purpose. But the court can not resolve to grant him the exclusive right to tap.

The court confirms and renews the sentence pronounced on August 28, 1647, upon Willem Jeuriaenz¹ on account of the assault committed against the person of Antony de Hooges. The honorable director, therefore, is requested and directed to execute and carry out the same in all its parts and provisions.

[3] Thursday, April 23 Anno 1648

At the request of Cornelis Teunisz for an extension of time to render his account, permission is granted him for the last time, without prejudice to our previous order, to render his account on Tuesday next, without fail, on pain of forfeiture of one pound Flemish, or six guilders.

Quirynd Cornelisz remaining in default as regards the previous order, peremptory order is hereby given that he be found and made to execute the same, according to circumstances.

The matter of Jacob Jansz Flodder, in regard to the contract of the new mill and the two stallions, is put over to next Thursday. As to the payment for the kill, two of us will be appointed to sign and give a receipt.

Extraordinary session, April 25 Anno 1648

After Quirynd Cornelisz according to the previous judgment had been placed in confinement, it was at Hans Vos's urgent request agreed to hold his bail and suretyship valid, on condition of binding himself as principal for the [appearance] of the person of [Quirynd Cornelisz] on Monday [week], being the 4th of May of the year above written and for his proceeding with the case [] whereupon [said Quiryne Cornelisz was released from] confinement.

[3v] Thursday, April 30 Anno 1648

Upon the petition of Jan Verbeeck and Jan Michielsz the following serves for apostil: Their request is granted, namely, they may both, with a helper, to the exclusion of all others, take up the tailor's trade, binding themselves by contract for the accommodation of the colony, provided that neither of them shall be entitled to receive more than 36 stivers for a day's work and the helper 30 stivers. But as to the request that no one shall be allowed to take any work into the fort,¹ we can not approve of this for reasons us thereunto moving.

Cornelis Segersz is ordered to pay Reyer Stoffelsz, according to the assignment by Adriaen vander Donck, the sum of 49 guilders within the space of six weeks, in default whereof the said sum will be demanded of him by legal process. But if he can prove within the aforesaid time that he does not owe Vander Donck anything, this assignment will be of no value. On the other hand, from this date until the next Reyer Stoffelsz is debarred from exacting the first payment due to him.

Jan Van Bremen² is condemned to pay the fine for [striking?] Hans Vos in [] wheat.

² According to G. Beernink, De Geschiedschrijver en Rechtsgeleerde Dr. Arend van Slichtenhorst en zijn vader Brant van Slichtenhorst, p. 170, Jan Dircksz van Bremen came, not come from the city of Bremen, in Germany, as theretofore supposed, but from Amersfoort, in the province of Utrecht, van Bremen being the family name. It is possible, however, that Mr. Beernink confuses him with Jan Dircksz, Englishman, mentioned in these minutes under date of November 19, 1648, who is given in the accounts of the colony as from Amersfoort. In Resolutions of Brazil (W. I. Co. Oude Co., No. 68, Rijksarchief, The Hague), under date of Sept. 24, 1637, appears the following entry: "Jan Dircksz van Bremen, Constabel (gunner), who came into the country on the ship Graeff Ernestus, fl. 64:--."

[4] Evert Noldingh¹ is at his request granted permission to support himself by teaching school and to have a lot laid out for him.

It is ordered that Willem Jeuriaensz must render his account next Saturday, before noon, notice of which will be served on him by the court messenger.

Cornelis Theunisz from Breuckelen is once more ordered and commanded to render his account next Tuesday, on pain of forfeiting twenty-five guilders.

Thursday, May 7 Anno 1648.

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Hans Jansz from Rotterdam, for having beaten an Indian. First default.

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Jan van Bremen, for mischief done at night before and on the door of Jacob Jansz Stol.

[4v] May 11, 1648

Hans Vos attaches fl. 120 in the hands of Nikolaes Koorn and fl. . . . in the hands of Cornelis Segersz, on account of the debt alleged to be due by Adriaen vander Donck.

Thursday, May 28, 1648

Quiryen Cornelisz is ordered to complete his term of service with Evert Pels during the planting, according to his agreement, under penalty of forfeiting fl.25.

Upon the verbal request of Nicolaes Koorn, made here before the court, that he may receive and be paid certain private debts due him by some of the patroon's farm hands and others, the honorable gentlemen of the court have resolved and ordered, as they do hereby, that Nicolaes Koorn shall render to the director, commissioners and councilors (Gecommitteerden ende Raeden) of this colony a statement of the goods which he received from the late honorable patroon, according to his invoices, and render a proper account of everything for our inspection and careful examination and, furthermore, that he shall act in accordance with the order to be issued by us on Tuesday next, being the 2d of June of the year 1648.

[5] April 26, anno 1648, Director Slichtenhorst protested against a certain writing of the Honorable General P. Stuyvesant, about the proclamation of a day of fasting and prayer, whereby he is considered to have infringed the right and authority of the honorable patroon. This writing was delivered just before the commencement of divine service, so that [the court] had no time to read it.

[6v] ¹ Court proceedings, June 1 Anno 1648

Pieter Cornelisz and Harmen Bastiaenz are provisionally referred to arbitrators.

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Thomas Chamber, Jacob Jansz, farmer on the Vlacte,² and Claes Teunisz Uylenspiegel. First default.

Court proceedings, July 2 Anno 1648

Jacob Jansz, farmer on the Vlacte, says that he heard Jan Thomasz say first that Claes Tyssen was an informer. He is given eight days in which to clear himself of the charge that he too said so and is therefore ordered to appear at the expiration of that time.

Claes Teunisz denies that he called Claes Tysschen an informer. It may be true, he says, but [he knows no] more about it than that others said so.

Is granted time and cited to appear.

¹Folios 5v and 6 are blank.

²Jacob Jansz from Stoutenburch. The farms was later known as the Schuyler Flatts.

[7] Thomas Chamber being asked whether on the 4th of June of this year he was not with some other persons on the Vlackte, answers that he will say neither no nor yes and that none of those sitting on the bench can prove to him that he called Claes Tyssen an informer. He says that he will not take an oath in his own case. Is granted a delay and cited like the foregoing persons.

Hans Vos is ordered to complete his term of service and to serve six days in addition for time lost by him.

Thursday, July 16 Anno 1648

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Harmen Bastiaenz, defendant, and Gerrit Jansz, cooper, and Evert Noldingh.

Having seen the written contract between Jan Thomasz and Thomas Chamber about the building of the house of the said Jan Thomasz, whereby Thomas Chamber binds himself to make said house tight all around by the end of April of this year, and finding that the time is passing by, Thomas Chamber is ordered to start the work next Monday, but without [] [] fine of 50 stivers [] for lost time.

[7v] [The court] having at the request of the Honorable Director Slichtenhorst heard the urgent and insistent demand made by Marten Hendricksz for payment of his lawful account and finding that the goods or the value thereof are in the hands of Teunis Cornelisz, as shown by his debit account, it is resolved that Teunis shall likewise by legal process be forced to make payment within the space of 14 days from this date. In case of failure to pay within eight days after the appointed time, he shall forfeit three guilders; [for failure to pay] within three days after the last mentioned date he shall incur the double fine; and thereafter he shall be dealt with according to law as the circumstances may require.

Marten Hendricksz is ordered to satisfy and pay Willem Fredericksz what is due according to their mutual account within the space of one month from this date.

Whereas Domine Megapolensis has recently suffered great loss through theft and requests to have the houses in the Greenen Bos searched,¹ without casting any reflection on the honest and the innocent, his Reverence's request is granted, with the understanding that no offense in the least shall be given to honest persons. In case of refusal, people [shall be dealt with] according to law.

[8] Court proceedings, July 23 Anno 1648

Cornelis Theunisz from Breuckelen and Evert Pels are ordered to settle their accounts within eight days and then to consider and determine together who is to satisfy Claes Tyssen.

Cornelis Theunisz appeals [from the decision].

Adriaen vander Donck undertakes at the very first opportunity to collect as far as possible for Hans Vos at the Manhatans the forty-seven guilders which are due to Hans Vos from Simon Waelingen, according to his order, the previous attachments heretofore levied by Hans Vos against Corn: Segersz, N: Coorn and others being hereby vacated and declared void.

Extraordinary session, September 9, 1648

It is resolved that Cornelis Jansz shall receive the gun inventoried [among the effects] of the farm heretofore used by Quiryn, in consideration of the purchase under contract.

[8v] Court proceedings, October 8, 1648

Claes Gerritsz confesses that he wounded Jan, the smith, with a plow staff, drawing blood.

Whereupon the honorable director draws a complaint, demanding the imposition of a fine of three hundred guilders.

Cornelis Segersz being cited on account of some derogatory remarks which he is alleged to have made in the tavern about the person of Andries de Vos in his capacity as magistrate (gerechtshersoon), the defendant declares that he has nothing to say about the person of Andries de Vos as regards his office and special duty and conduct but what redounds to his honor and virtue, declaring that he conducts himself as an honest man is bound to do.

This he has declared here before the court.

A. DE HOOGES, Secretary.

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Cornelis van Es and his wife, separately, Pieter Claesz and Evert Pels. First default.

The order of [July] 23 of this year as to the question between Cornelis Teunisz and Evert Pels is renewed and they are once more ordered to settle their mutual accounts within eight days after date, to wit, as far as Claes Tyssen is concerned, under penalty of forfeiting six guilders each, and [so] from eight days to eight days.

[9] Evert Pels is cited:

- 1 To pay the wages earned by Claes Tyssen
- 2 To pay for one half of the pease that were mowed and for the great damage and loss of time [suffered by Claes Tyssen] as the result of the beating
- 3 To pay the fine for beating Claes [Tyssen]
- 4 On account of his wife's abusive language to the honorable director, when he served the complaint.

Upon the petition of Michiel Jansz, praying that he may receive a final settlement of accounts, the following serves for apostil: That he is to have his account of everything including the trade, ready by next Saturday, or, in case his journey should thereby be delayed, sooner, in order that, [the court] securing thorough evidence of everything, a final settlement may be reached and agreed upon.

Extraordinary session, October 10, 1648

Michiel Jansz is arrested and ordered under penalty of the lord's highest fine to make out and render his yearly account, in debita forma, as head farmer and lessee, from the year 1638 to the year 1646, inclusive, as well as of the trade and the horses delivered to him, for which he must furnish two sufficient sureties. Which I certify,

B. v. SLICHTENHORST, Director.

[10v] The honorable director, Brandt van Slichtenhorst, plaintiff, against Michiel Jansz, defendant.

1 In the first place, the defendant must give security for the satisfaction of the judgment and choose his domicile where notice or legal summons may be served in his absence.

2 Michiel Jansz is asked whether he was not engaged upon the same [terms as those of the] contract which Gerrit de Reus made with the honorable patroon and whether he did not occupy the farm called "de Hooge Berch"¹ from the year 1640 to the year 1646 upon the same conditions?

3 [The plaintiff demands] that the defendant, as the patroon's farmer, render a true account and statement of the grain and crops and of the cattle, butter, milk and hogs for the years 1638 and 1639, and this for each year separately, and in detail. Also a statement as to what he has done with all the property aforesaid and that within a specified time, according to his own request of October 8, 1648; if not, the plaintiff places his loss on that score at the sum of five hundred guilders, plus lawful damages.

4 [The plaintiff demands] that the defendant in his capacity of former lessee of the patroon's farm called "den Hogen Berch," from the year 1640 to the year 1646, inclusive, render an accurate account, for each year separately, of the crops which the defendant received, as well as of the cattle, wagon and plow and further of all the farm implements, household effects, linen, woolens, nothing excepted, which were entrusted to him in the year 1640, and of all the grain, cattle, butter and milk produced and raised on the aforesaid farm after the year 1640, together with a statement as to what he has done with it all, said account to be rendered within a specified time; if not, the plaintiff in his capacity aforesaid charges for his loss on that account the sum of two thousand guilders, plus lawful damages.

5 That the defendant return to the plaintiff in the colony the three horses which he took with him out of the colony in the year 1646, in as good condition as they were at the time, and this within a specified time; if not, the plaintiff places his loss on that account at [] and fifty guilders for lawful damages.

6 That the defendant within a specified time shall submit an accurate inventory of all the household effects, linens, woolens and everything else that the defendant and his wife took with them out of the colony; otherwise the plaintiff will charge for his loss in that respect the sum of 500 guilders plus lawful damages.

[11] 7 That the plaintiff and the defendant within three days shall have the house, barn, barrack and further all the buildings occupied by him to the year 1646, appraised by impartial carpenters, who are also to estimate and appraise in what state he left said buildings two years ago; otherwise the plaintiff will charge for his loss the sum of 2000 guilders plus lawful damages. And in case of refusal, the plaintiff shall have the appraisal made by impartial persons at the defendant's expense.

8 That the defendant shall within a specified time render a specified and detailed account of the total cost of the patroon's house in the way of building, materials and expenses; otherwise the plaintiff will charge for his loss on that account fifteen hundred guilders, plus lawful damages.

And whereas the defendant at his departure for the Manhatans presented a final account, written with his own hand, as he has admitted in court, entitled: "Account of all that is in my custody on the farm, belonging to the farm," which showed that he still had in common with his patroon the sum of two thousand nine hundred and fifty-four guilders, eleven stivers, the honorable plaintiff demands that the half of the aforesaid sum be deposited with the court, with costs.

9 That the defendant shall also show how many beavers, otter skins, or other peltries he has traded or otherwise received during his term, each year separately. Otherwise, the plaintiff will place his loss at 1000 guilders, plus lawful damages.

10 Whereas it is notorious that Michiel Jansz has traded many skins, proof is demanded, first of all, that the defendant had the right to trade these and, in default of such proof, the plaintiff concludes that the defendant, in accordance with his contract, has forfeited all his earned wages and all the effects which he had here in this country and, furthermore, that he is to be arbitrarily punished for having traded those forbidden peltries. With costs.

11 Whereas Michiel Jansz on October 10, 1648, was arrested by Director Slichtenhorst within the limits of the jurisdiction of the colony and without furnishing sureties has ventured to move into another jurisdiction, so that he has not only [violated] the jurisdiction of the court and the high and low jurisdiction of the honorable patroon, but also has [acted in contempt of] our aforesaid patroon whose place we here occupy [] [] broken the arrest [] [] fine [].

Whereas the defendant has heretofore, at the time of the war at the Manhatans, ventured to barter forbidden ammunition with the savages against some peltries, at the expense of much Christian blood of our Christian neighbors, who are of the same religion and subject to the same sovereignty and power, only to satisfy his vulgar greed, contrary to the placard of the High and Mighty Lords the States General and the ordinance of the honorable council of New Netherland, the plaintiff concludes that the defendant has forfeited his life, or else is liable to such arbitrary punishment and heavy fine as the honorable court shall consider fit to impose, and [demands that] in addition he be condemned to pay fifty guilders [to the director] by way of a fee or fine, according to the aforesaid placard and ordinance.

And whereas the defendant, or person arrested in the year 1644, ventured to send his servants out of the colony with an order in his own handwriting and about 50 beavers, without paying any recognition for them either at Fort Orange or at the Manhatans, and whereas these servants having come to the assistant in Fort De Hoop,¹ sold said beavers to the English who were stationed at the trading house of Mr Wytingh, contrary to the express order of the aforesaid placard, the honorable plaintiff concludes that the aforesaid beavers or the value thereof are subject to confiscation and [demands] that in addition he be condemned to pay a fine of fifty guilders and also be arbitrarily punished as an example to others, according to the aforesaid ordinance. Cum expensis.

The director promises to help the widow of Mattys, deceased,² get the fl. 50 due her, either through Willem Jeuriaensz, or else at the very first opportunity.

Finding that Nicolaes Coorn has presumed to go to the Manhatans, notwithstanding he was ordered by the court on the 19th of August of this year to show and deliver to us within 14 days after that date a more complete account of everything, as many things were found to have been omitted and passed over, of which we have never seen any account but which he had nevertheless in his possession, we therefore once more order the said Nicolaes Coorn peremptorily within eight days after the service of the next notice to present and deliver the account, under penalty of the lord's highest fine.

November 15, 1649, the notice was served and [a copy of the order] of this date handed to him.

[13] The honorable court having more than once had the person of Goossen Gerritsz urged by the honorable director of this colony to allow himself to be employed in the capacity of magistrate (gerechtspersoon), and [said Goossen Gerritsz] now appearing, he declares:

² Mathijs Jansz.

- 1 First, that he considers himself incompetent for it.
- 2 Secondly, that he owns no house and lot here and therefore is not bound to serve.
- 3 Thirdly, as thus far he is not on a free basis with the patroon, he can not resolve to accept the office, but as soon as that comes about, he will offer the patroon his services in everything.

Which reasons having been duly weighed and considered by us, we have deemed, as we still deem, that they are not of such weight that this good cause should thereby suffer and Goossen Gerritsz be held excusable.

Therefore, once more and for the last time, we kindly request him voluntarily to accept the vacant office; otherwise, though very reluctantly, we shall find ourselves forced to resort to other means.

Goossen Gerritsz accepts the magistrate's office, provided he may first make a trip to the Manhatans, which is granted.

Whereas on the 14th of September 1648, at the public leasing, where Director Slichtenhorst, sitting with the commissioners, occupied the place of the honorable patroon, Cornelis Hendricksz Van Es three several times, in the presence of the Reverend Domine Megapolensis and publicly in the presence of all the bystanders, dared to call the director a cheat, charging him with having cheated his son-in-law, Peeter Claesz, and stating that the director did not keep his word with his son-in-law, [said director] brought these slanderous words to the attention of the aforesaid gentlemen in the presence of all the bystanders and cited him to appear on the first court day and on the 21st of September summoned him once more to appear before the aforesaid court, to be held on the 1st of October 1648. And whereas Director Slichtenhorst has taken these gross insults much to heart and would not willingly have suffered them for anything under the sun, he being a person of good standing and reputation and moreover the director and representative of the honorable patroon as proprietor of the colony here, and it being intolerable that a subject, by attacking his honor and character, should thus, without right or reason, several times publicly, unjustly and grossly insult his overlord, which constitutes a capital crime; therefore, it is requested that he give security for the satisfaction of the judgment and his life, and furthermore, that the offender shall go or be taken into custody, as the director also offers to do, and prosecute the case from day to day, during two terms, on condition that the costs shall be paid by the party who is in the wrong, and furthermore according to law. The director of the aforesaid colony demands that Van Es, being the offender, shall appear before the full council and declare that he is sorry that he uttered the aforesaid slanders and that he knows nothing of the aforesaid director but what is consistent with honor and virtue. Furthermore, that in addition the offender shall be condemned to pay for each time a fine of [], said money to be deposited with the court and this to three times the amount of the fine provided by the resolution and ordinance of May [], 1648; all cum expensis.

[14v] Also, that Van Es be condemned to pay the same fines as above because on September 14, 1648, at the public leasing, after everybody had been separately called into the room and the conditions had been read to them in order to proceed with the leasing, according to the day and hour appointed therefor at least two weeks in advance, he ventured in collusion with others to make trouble in order that the honorable patroon's property should not be leased at a proper figure and the day result in failure, the said Van Es and his son-in-law, Pieter Claesz, together with others, in order to achieve their wicked purpose, leaving the room in the presence of the said director, the domine and the commissioners. And as this is a matter of great consequence, the aforesaid director demands that Van Es shall for that crime be once more condemned to pay the aforesaid fine of 300 guilders, by virtue of the aforesaid ordinance, and in addition be arbitrarily punished as an example to others. Cum expensis.

The Honorable Director Slichtenhorst, plaintiff, against Pieter Claesz, defendant.

A complaint on account of slander is likewise brought against the person of Pieter Claesz, because he has several times, openly and before everybody, said to the director: "You must acknowledge that you are a liar," and in addition accused the director of cheating him and not keeping his word, as an honest man should, of which proof is demanded. Furthermore, [the director] brings the same charges against him as against Van Es and also demands that Pieter Claesz shall be condemned to pay three times fl. 6, for having at the serving of the summons on September 21, 1648, three times in the presence of the domine and the aforesaid director wickedly sworn by God's holy name and blood, that he was no Christian and []. Therefore, that he shall for each time and as often as three times be condemned to pay a fine of six guilders and in addition be arbitrarily punished, according to the aforesaid ordinance of May [], Anno [1648], with costs.

The plaintiff also demands that the defendant as security for the satisfaction of the judgment in every respect shall be immediately taken into custody and in addition [be asked to deposit] two hundred guilders.

[15] Court proceedings, November 19 Anno 1648

This day, Goossen Gerritsz has taken the oath of fidelity as magistrate before Director Slichtenhorst.

Claes Gerritsz here, before the court, denies and declares untrue the statement made by Director Slichtenhorst that he, Claes Gerritsz, four years ago, had traded more than one hundred beavers on the island of Cornelis Segersz.

Claes Gerritsz declares here that Arendt van Curler gave him permission to trade.

Claes Gerritsz says that Ruth Jacobsz told him that he was at liberty to strike Jan Dircksz, Englishman,¹ if he were obstinate,

N. B. January 18, Director Slichtenhorst, in my presence, served notice on Cornelis Segersz that he, Cornelis, on May 14, 1648, told Mr Slichtenhorst that Claes Gerritsz four years ago dwelt with him and in that year had traded more than one hundred beavers, which statement of the director the said Cornelis did not contradict, but tacitly practically admitted.

The same, against Cornelis van Es.

Whereas Cornelis van Es was cited on October 29, 1648, for having out of spite threshed out a quantity of oat straw, which in winter is the best fodder, and thrown the straw on the manure pile, to the detriment of the next lessee and the patroon's horses and cattle, which is a matter of grave consequence, which in a land of justice neither can nor ought to be tolerated, the plaintiff demands that said van Es be condemned to pay a fine of 25 guilders and to make good the loss of the straw, cum expensis, the more so as the said van Es on the 18th of November afore-said positively told the director that he would not give the patroon's horses any oats, much less hunt them up before the winter, when one ought to put them in the stable, as another had driven them off and he did not care to claim them, but preferred to let them run wild, and also protested that he would not do it, for which reason the director on the 19th ditto attached the person of van Es and all his readily convertible and inconvertible property, forbidding him to leave the colony under penalty of the lord's highest fine, to prevent all loss and damage as to horses and cattle through neglect or mischief on his part, or through accident, and also as security for the rent. [The director further demands] that he shall vacate the house and barn next New Year and shortly render to the director a specified account [17] The Hon. Director Slechtenhorst, plaintiff, against Claes Gerritsz, defendant.

Having heretofore given sufficient security to satisfy the judgment, the honorable plaintiff says that the defendant was engaged as farmer (bouwkecht) by the honorable patroon on the 26th of May anno 1640, which he still is on the same terms as the former farmers, to wit, Gerrit de Rues, Cornelis Tuenisz, Cornelis Maesz, Zymon Walichsz and Michiel Jansz, according to the contracts of the defendant and the aforesaid persons, which contracts specifically mention, and by every one has been agreed and sworn to, that they are not to trade in peltries on forfeiture of their wages and all their effects, applying all the more to the effects of the defendant, who has never had permission, nor even asked, so to do. To which must be added that no one has been allowed to sell forbidden ammunition to the savages, on pain of being punished with death, and in case any one denounces any one for having acted contrary thereto, he shall receive a reward of fifty guilders. And whereas the honorable plaintiff on the 28th of September anno 1648 found in the defendant's possession six bars of lead, he is liable to pay the aforesaid fine in accordance with the placard of the Lords States [General] and the Hon. Chartered West India Company, dated the 31st of March anno 1639, and the ordinance of the honorable patroon and also of the fort and the colony, dated the 8th of May anno 164[5?]. Granting even that the defendant had obtained consent to trade — which he in no wise had — like Master Abraham,¹ Henrick Albertsz, Reyer Stoffelsz, Sander Leenersz and others, who contracted with the honorable patroon to trade, the defendant would nevertheless be bound each time to report and specify the number of all such peltries and to send them to the patroon and to no one else, and in addition be obliged to pay one guilder for each beaver as well as one sixth part to the honorable patroon, or his agent, on pain of confiscation of all the peltries and furthermore of all the defendant's effects, according to the contracts of the aforesaid persons. In addition to all this the defendant has been bold enough, contrary to the express order and sentence of this court, dated the 23d of June anno 1645, and notwithstanding all this, to venture to carry on the trade continuously on his own authority, without paying any recognition or entering any peltries, in spite of the honorable patroon's order to contract and the sentence of the court, whereby the defendant has committed the highest offense, which in a land of justice neither can nor ought to remain unpunished, the defendant having violated thereby not only the patroon's high and low jurisdiction, but also acted in contempt of [17v] the court here and in the highest degree offended the Lords States [General], whose place we occupy here. The honorable plaintiff, for the reasons aforesaid, therefore demands that the defendant within fourteen days shall make an accurate return of all the peltries traded by him, specifying the number for each year separately from the year 1640 to this date, in default of which the plaintiff shall count the loss at ten hundred guilders in addition to legal damages. Furthermore, that he shall be condemned to give security for the payment of 50 guilders aforesaid and that on account of his offense, to wit, that the defendant without consent has traded on his own authority, he shall be condemned to pay a fine of 500 guilders, and that in addition he shall forfeit all his effects and be arbitrarily punished as an example to others, cum expensis. And all this without prejudice to the plaintiff's further causes of action, both on account of the fighting engaged in by the defendant and the selling or bartering of forbidden ammunition, and on account of the confiscation and having traded contrary to the sentence and the ordinance.

forfeited six guilders for each offense, in addition to the damage done to the horses, each person, moreover, having been summoned to appear on this day to defend himself; and whereas Claes Uylenspiegel, three several times, yes, even twice on the same day, notwithstanding the fine and the prohibition and warning by the honorable director and the prohibition of their honors' ordinance, out of pure mischief and in spite of the court, has presumed to ride past the director's door as fast as the horse could run, he, Claes, always having the lead over the others, whereby he has not only violated [the authority of] the honorable patroon in his high and low jurisdiction and [that of] the court here, but also [that of] the Lords States General whose places we occupy and committed the highest crime [against them]; therefore, the honorable plaintiff demands that the aforesaid Claes shall be publicly exposed in the pillory and be banished from the colony, in accordance with the custom of the fatherland, where those who disobey and disregard the lord's prohibition and banishment are punished with death; or that the same shall be apprehended and for the first offense be [confined] for four days, for [the second offense eight days], and for the third offense sixteen [days, and in addition]. [18v] be exposed and banished as above written, as an example to others; cum expensis. And that all the others, for the damage and abuse of the horses, in addition to a fine of one pound Flemish, shall for each offense pay three guilders to the poor and furthermore be arbitrarily punished; cum expensis.

N. B. Their honors will please do their duty, in order that the dumb animals may not again do justice themselves and put the court to shame, as has happened before.

Hans Vos, being summoned to appear by Pieter de Boer on account of his contract of service for four months, which he here admits and promises to fulfil, is ordered to fulfil the same and to satisfy Pieter, on pain of paying the fine imposed heretofore on Jacob Aertsz, waegaer (wagoner), in case he remains in default.

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Evert Pels, defendant, for having wounded Thomas Jansz in the head with a piece of wood and drawing blood. Demands condemnation according to the ordinance of the Hon. Chartered West India Company at the Manhatans, or of Amsterdam, and as Evert Pels had his servant get the canoe of Thomas Jansz without his knowledge or consent, the plaintiff maintains that Evert Pels has forfeited the sum of 25 guilders according to the former ordinance, all cum expensis.

The same, against the wife of Evert Pels.

Whereas she slandered the honorable director and the other members of the court in general, the honorable plaintiff concludes that she is liable to a fine of 300 guilders in accordance with the ordinance, and demands that she be fined five times six guilders, cum expensis.

[19] Evert Pels is ordered to pay and satisfy the 26 guilders which he owes Claes Tyssen, in money or goods, as stipulated, cum expensis, saving his claim against Cornelis Teunisz.

The honorable court, having considered the wilful violation of our former ordinance by those who ride their horses at a reckless speed, hereby condemn each offender for each violation to pay the stipulated fine. But as to Claes Teunisz called Uylenspiegel, observing the mischief and recklessness committed by him in spite of the express prohibition [of such riding], he is hereby, on pain of corporal punishment, warned not to disregard the words, admonition and prohibition of the honorable director, especially [when acting] against the ordinances and orders of the honorable court. This time, therefore, by way of mitigation of sentence, only a fine, as above, is imposed upon him.

The honorable court, for reasons them thereunto moving, have granted Claes Gerritsz time until one month from this date to settle his account, on condition that he shall forfeit one pound Flemish for each week that he remains in default after the aforesaid time and of giving security for the satisfaction of the judgment.

[19v] Cornelis Hendricksz van Es repeats his charge that the director wronged his son-in-law,¹ which he is to prove.

Cornelis Hendricksz van Es having several times by opprobrious words slandered the person of the Hon. Director Slichtenhorst, according to the complaint instituted in the matter, of which complaint a copy was handed to him three weeks ago, and [said van Es] now appearing in court, he persists that the honorable director wronged or unjustly treated his son-in-law, Pieter Claesz. Which bald assertion remaining without any further evidence or proof, it is considered a great crime that such slander should be so loosely uttered.

Appeared Willem Kay, together with Peter Hartgers, his brother-in-law,¹ which said Peter Hartgers has lawfully bound himself as surety for the return within fourteen days, in as good condition as it now is, of the horse of the Vlacte called Hamstien, with the saddle. And in case the aforesaid horse should be injured, [he binds himself] to make good the damage, and if it should die or stay away to pay one hundred and twenty guilders for it, cash. Which said conditions the aforesaid Hartgers has agreed to in court with a clasp of the hand, on the 21st of December 1648.

On the 27th ditto the horse was returned in as good condition as it was when received.

[20] Extraordinary session, December 19 Anno 1648

Resolved that the honorable director shall once more summon Evert Pels to pay the wages of Claes Tyssen within twice twenty-four hours, it being found that he has given two summer skins, valued at 16 guilders, which is not acceptable. And in case he refuses to pay, the director is to advance the money, subject to the restitution of double the amount.

On the 21st ditto, notice was served on Evert Pels in the presence of Mr Hoogens, by affixing said notice to the door.¹

Jan van Bremen. This day, the 15th of January of this year, Jan van Bremen was summoned for having in the spring, at the house and in the presence of Cryn Cornelisz, first struck Hans Vos on the head with his fist and then, without reason or excuse, drawn his knife on him and cut him about the head. And whereas the said van Bremen has heretofore engaged in fighting, he therefore owes a double fine according to the ordinance, so that he has forfeited:

Furthermore, that he, van Bremen, made bold to take Hans Vos, the court messenger, by the arm and rudely tried to push him out of the house of the tavernkeeper, or another man's house, making him out to be an informer,¹ all without cause or excuse, of which proof is demanded. I, Brandt van Slichtenhorst, in the capacity of director of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, notify you, Adriaen vander Donck, or whatever other Christian name you have, and let you know that on the 2d of January 1649, in my capacity aforesaid I caused the court messenger of this colony to attach, first, two hundred schepels of wheat which are still in the hands of Cornelis Segersz, per balance of the agreement entered into with the aforesaid Cornelis Segersz, and whatever else belonging to you, vander Donck, is in the custody of the said Cornelis Segersz, and this in order to recover payment or compensation for a black stallion, valued at 300 guilders, and 5 cows at 80 guilders apiece, belonging to the honorable patroon and entrusted to the hands of vander Donck, with the interest thereon. So that, in my capacity aforesaid, I hereby summon you, vander Donck, for so far as you may have an interest in the aforesaid wheat and other property, to appear on the 27th day of May Anno 1649 before the court of the aforesaid colony, in order to hear all such demand and prayer for relief as I, in my capacity aforesaid, may have to make and submit. On the same date, the aforesaid Thomas came to the door of the trading house, to the director's, and again asked to fight and within the hearing of Dominus Megapolensis swore three or four times in most ungodly fashion, using God's Holy Name in vain, notwithstanding the honorable director and the minister rebuked him severely for it,¹ it being Sunday and the director and the minister being present; for which he has incurred three times the fine of six guilders, double, or three times twelve guilders.

And whereas each of the persons arrested has not only committed the most serious crime within the high and low jurisdiction of the honorable patroon, but has also in the highest manner violated the jurisdiction of the States General, whose place and administration of justice are represented here, therefore the honorable plaintiff demands that each person shall first of all give bail for the satisfaction of the judgment, since

The patroon's Hoff probably refers to the garden belonging to the patroon's house, which was occupied by Van Slichtenhorst. Van Slichtenhorst afterwards claimed that he had more than a hundred sleigh loads of manure drawn into this hof and kept the clapboard fence around it in repair at his own expense. The term kerckhof may be used in the general sense of a burying ground, but may also mean the plot around the former trading house of the patroon, which according to a petition presented by de Hooges on March 27, 1648, had shortly before been turned into a church. The words: "being the ground where heretofore the trading house of the honorable patroon stood," are inserted in the margin and may, perhaps, in the original have been inserted in the wrong place and be intended to apply, not to the Hoff, but to the ground leased for a garden.

Court Proceedings, May 29 Anno 1649

The honorable court of this colony of Rensselaerswyck having examined the complaint of the director against Michiel Jansz, together with the answer, replication and rejoinder, and having duly considered everything, hereby order the said defendant to render an itemized account of everything in proper form to the aforesaid director.

[32] May 31, 1649

Whereas question has arisen between Director Slichtenhorst and Mons^r. Adriaen vander Donck about the claim heretofore presented by vander Donck, the director, after examination of his lawful debit and alleged credit accounts, caused two hundred schepels of wheat belonging to vander Donck to be attached, according to the writ served on him, in which the date on which he was to appear was fixed at the 27th of May 1649. Vander Donck having appeared on the 21st instant, it was arranged and agreed that the 21st instead of the 27th would serve as the date of appearance, as it actually did serve, as will sufficiently appear from the complaint and the written answer of vander Donck, in his own hand. And whereas vander Donck claims and alleges that the appointed day passed without prosecution of the case, and he, in bad faith, transferred his title to the aforesaid 200 schepels of wheat to others (in derogation of vander Donck's former agreement), as vander Donck has himself declared in the presence of the said Slichtenhorst and Antonio de Hooges, therefore, the court messenger, by order of the director, on the 31st of the aforesaid month of May, once more served an attachment against the person of the said vander Donck and by mutual consent arranged to have court held at two o'clock in the afternoon of the said 31st of May; however, without prejudice to Director Slichtenhorst's former legal right as regards the wheat transferred to others, which remains intact as before and for which the former attachment was made, his case being prosecuted from day to day, at the expense of the party who shall be found in the wrong, for which security is demanded; all without loss or damage, cum expensis.

Furthermore, an attachment is served against him to make reply to written interrogatories.

Extraordinary session, on the date above written

The honorable court shows that the 200 schepels of wheat belonging to Adriaen vander Donck, which were attached, can not be received or delivered without the consent of the court, as the attachment was made by order of the court . . . [remainder illegible].

After the fire, in the year 1646, had destroyed one of the [two] farms on Casteels island, Adriaen vander Donck, who had had possession thereof, resolved to sell his remaining interest in the farm, with the consent of and before the court. After the sale, vander Donck resolved to leave the colony, which he did, also with the consent of the court, having first delivered his account to Mons^r. de Hooges. But as they could not finally settle the accounts in regard to the burned house and some other claims on both sides, they decided to write at the first opportunity for advice to the guardians of the patroon of the colony and then to settle their accounts. Thereupon vander Donck departed.

Anno 1647, after the arrival of the ship Valchenier, vander Donck brought suit before the court against Mons^r. de Hooges, while he was at the Manhatans and demanded final settlement, but de Hooges had not yet sent over the account, so that he was ordered to do so at the first opportunity, when they were to proceed with the case. The account was sent over on the ship de Princes, which was wrecked and the account was lost. Anno 1648, Director Brant van Slichtenhorst arrived and vander Donck several times requested him, verbally and in writing and also by petition to pay the money coming to him according to his account, but never received any. Finally, some effects of vander Donck having been attached by the director of this colony anno 1649, the [] of May, it was agreed upon by Director Brant van Slichtenhorst on the one side and Adriaen vander Donck on the other side []

 [33] guardians of the honorable patroon of this colony and Adriaen vander Donck, upon this condition and stipulation that whoever is entitled to anything shall receive the money there,¹ without the parties referring each other to New Netherland. And in case it should happen that the honorable guardians on the one side and Adriaen vander Donck on the other side had any points about which they could not agree, neither of the parties, to wit, neither the honorable guardians, nor vander Donck, shall have the right to resort to or make use of judicial proceedings to settle the matter, but both parties, the guardians as well as vander Donck, shall be held to leave their dispute to the decision of arbitrators, whom they shall mutually chose, each party choosing one according to his pleasure and the two joining to themselves a third person, to whom all disputes shall be left for final decision, without either side attempting to do anything to the contrary. And the director of the colony of Rensselaerswyck hereby promises and binds himself that the honorable guardians on their part shall faithfully carry out this contract without any exception, just as vander Donck on his part promises to do this. But in case either one of the parties, except by reason of death or other serious misfortune, should fail to perform his part, the other party shall be free to recover his loss and damage wherever it shall seem best to him.

Furthermore, Director Slichtenhorst shall not write to his honorable masters about this matter or advise them of it without showing Adriaen vander Donck before his departure []
[33v] vander Donck, after receipt of the gravamina to be brought forward by the honorable Director Slichtenhorst, shall deliver to his honor the reply with such other gravamina, if any, as he may have, and thus mutually exchange the papers in the case. Thus done and decided in good faith on the date above written, and in witness of the truth confirmed with their usual signatures and sealed with their seals, in the colony of Rensselaerswyck. Adriaen vander Donck declares here before the court, by handfast, that he owes Claes Tyssen no more than fl. 53, say fifty-three guilders.

Information taken by the director from the mouth of Franz Jacobsz, bachelor, about 17 years old

Declares that Claes Andriesz from Hilversom, about midnight, between the 20th and 21st of October 1649, lay sleeping in the Greenen Bos, down on the river bank, before the house where Evert Pels lives, and that Jacob Lambertsz two or three times in succession rolled down from the upper part of the bank over the body of Claes aforesaid, who, being awakened thereby and angry, struck said Jacob on the head, first with his fist and then with a stone, in such a way that Jacob fell. Getting up again, Jacob ran up the bank and got a knife with which he approached Claes, saying, after he had sharpened the knife a couple of times on the ground, Now stand your man! Whereupon Claes, seeing this, came up the height and struck Jacob, who cut Claes several times across the body with the back of the knife . . .

Gerrit van Wencom declares that a certain Mahican, whom he [found] at [Aer]t Jacobsz's, at Bethlehem, on Wednesday, the 8th of December 1649, [said Indian] being quite drunk with anise water, assaulted and fell upon him in cold blood and almost strangled him, in such a way that his head was extremely swollen, but that he was accidently released by another Indian. Aertz and Hans Vos declare last week. . . [Remainder of page destroyed].

[43] They declare also that the strong liquor was sold to the Indians by Aert Jacobsz by wooden bowlfuls and tapped to them in large quantities, the wine being mixed with water, but that Aert aforesaid was unwilling to tap to any one, among others to Gerrit van Wencom, who did not have ready money, saying that he would have nothing to do with that, not even in case of the director, so that Aert Jacobsz came back empty handed. And that Aert Jacobsz said that for a gill of wine (mixed half and half with water), he could get eight stivers from the Indians.

The aforesaid deponents have confirmed and corroborated the foregoing by the clasping of hands with the director, instead of by oath.

Quod attestor,

A: DE HOOGES, Secretary

This day, the 14th of December Anno 1649, the director and commissioners have sold to Ruth Jacobsz a black stallion of 10 years and a bay gelding of 8 years, both for fl. 225, and for pasturing each horse [he is to pay] yearly fl. 8.

October 5, the patroon's sheep were sold to Mr Stuyvesant, for the reason that the wolves daily destroyed many of them and this bait also resulted in the loss of some calves.

[53v] Court proceedings, March 31 Anno 1650

Willem Jeuriaensz acknowledges his signature to his contract. Also, that he bought in the year 1648 one cow and in the year 1649 another cow from the patroon, at the prices agreed upon.

Cornelis Teunisz van Westbroeck denies that recently and again on March 26, 1650, at the leasing of the farms at the house of Pieter Bronck, he called Hans Vos a rascal or a thief catcher.

Upon the petition of the honorable director:

Passing by all other considerations, it is ordered in general that he shall bind himself by definite agreement to comply with what the honorable guardians shall ordain, binding therefor his property, present or future, in the possession of himself or his heirs, under submission to the honorable court here, or wherever it may please the honorable patroon or his agent. Provided that van Es (after a copy of everything has been handed to him) shall within the space of two months from this date bring in his account and send a remonstrance setting forth his arguments to the honorable guardians.

Underneath was written:

Judgment as to the horse drowned by Dirck Hendricksz from Hilversum:

The director maintains that Christoffel Davits is bound to make good the loss of the horse.

The two commissioners (gecommitteerden), namely, de Hooges and Jan van Twiller, and the two councilors (Raeden), Ruth Jacobsz and Goossen Gerritsz, maintain as follows:

That the horse was intrusted to Christoffel Davits, but that he lent it to one Thomas Fairfax, his servant, for his own use as well as, among other things (as Thomas has declared before us), to fetch bread for Christoffel Davits. But that, after Thomas had left the horse, properly hitched, in the public square near the fort, trusting to [the safety of] the common road and the [vicinity of?] the patroon's house, Dirck Hendricksz, also a servant of said Christoffel Davits, unhitched the horse and riding it deliberately let it drown, and that now, being in irons, and being admonished about it by the director, as the guilty [] [] they maintain . . . [remainder of the page destroyed].

[In the margin is written:] The director appeals from the judgment. Certified by me, A. de Hooges.

[54] Antony de Hooges protests here before the commissioners and councilors that Director Brant van Slichtenhorst has to this date rendered no account to them, the commissioners, as required by his instructions.

Mr Brant van Slichtenhorst states that he would doubtless have received something if Antony de Hooges had not snapped it up.

Aernt Aertsz van Otterspoor offers himself as surety for the payment by Dirck Henricksz of two hundred guilders for the offenses committed by him according to the judgment of the court. Witness my mark, the 14th of April 1650.

Catalyn Donckersz¹ is ordered to compound for her offense with the honorable director.

The 12th of May Anno 1650

After the close of the sermon,² the director, in the presence of A. de Hooges and Rutger Jacobsz, offered and proposed to Jacob Waelingen to let him have the lease of the farm of Teunis Cornelisz, but he declined it. Also, at first, to let him have the use of the farm of Pieter Teunisz, which he likewise declined.

In the afternoon he agreed with Teunis Dircksz about the six morgens of land in the rear of the farm of the said Teunis Dircksz, cultivated by Teunis Cornelisz, on the following terms:

Teunis Dircksz shall pay to Teunis Cornelisz for the seed which is at present on the land fifty guilders, and to the patroon for this year's rent, one hundred guilders. At the next stubble

To the Honorable, Valiant, Very Worshipful Mr Petro Stuyvesant, Director General of New Netherland, Curaçao, etc., and to his honor's associated Council:

Whereas we understand from others and especially are informed in writing that your honors are instructed and consequently intend to oppose and prevent the settlement of Catskil, which was undertaken and is proceeding by order of the honorable guardians, and thus come into conflict with the latest order of their honors aforesaid, as the accompanying copy will show, we are compelled to remonstrate to your honors, since two conflicting matters can not be reconciled unless one give way and your honors must realize that it is impossible for us not to follow the instructions which according to our oath we are bound to carry into effect as far as it is possible, that such [opposition] is unbecoming united fellow countrymen and incompatible with the bond of union by which we are all joined together and that on the contrary we should help each other in every possible way. Our first request and proposal, therefore, is that your honors will be pleased to postpone the execution of your plans and have patience until by the first opportunity we are advised by our lords and masters how to govern ourselves. Meanwhile, we promise not to transport, nor to allow to be transported thither, any people, tools or other necessaries, until we have further advice, when we shall consider ourselves in duty bound to write again.

Wherewith, Honorable, Valiant, Very Worshipful Gentlemen, Mr Peter Stuyvesant and the Council, we commend you to the protection of Almighty God and send you greetings from the director and commissioners of the colony of Rensselaerswyck.

The ordinance of the Honorable Stuyvesant and the Council of New Netherland, in regard to the regulation and change in value of the wampum, dated May 30, 1650,¹ is approved and ratified by us in its entirety, so that every one is to govern himself accordingly.

The honorable director, commissioners and councilors of this colony, having weighed and considered the contents of the ordinance concerning the depreciation of the wampum, now posted in Fort Orange, have for pregnant reasons ratified and hereby do ratify the same, so that every inhabitant of this colony is to govern himself accordingly and to comply with the provisions of the aforesaid ordinance, under the penalty provided, which shall be enforced by this honorable court. Tomes Sanders, smith, residing at or about the Manhatans, is granted permission to move hither and to settle here with his family in the village (byeenwoning), to support himself by means of his usual trade.

Whereas the director, commissioners and councilors are informed by way of rumor that Cornelis Teunisz van Westbroeck takes the person of Jan Hagemans, free trader, and his goods into his house, without advising any one thereof, contrary to the instructions received by us, he is hereby notified and ordered to abstain therefrom and to send him away, under penalty of confiscation of the goods in the possession of the said Jan Hagemans.

of New York, 1:420, Kiliaen van Rensselaer died in 1646, and the same year the guardians of the young patroon rendered homage to the States General in the name of their ward. According to the above date, this must have taken place before June 30, 1646. In an entry in the minutes of the council of New Netherland, under date of August 8, 1644 (New York Colonial Mss, 4:199) reference is made to "the heirs of Mr. Renselaer, deceased." This shows that, contrary to the statements heretofore made, Kiliaen van Rensselaer died, not in 1646, but some time prior to August 8, 1644, possibly as early as the fall of 1643, when his communications to the colony ceased. Johannes van Rensselaer was not definitely invested with the high, middle and low jurisdiction of the colony until after April 7, 1650. See Resolution of the States General of that date in Doc. rel. to Col. Hist. N. Y., 1:383.

[57]¹ Extraordinary session, July 15, 1650

Jan van Hoesen complains of injury done to him by Willem Jeuriaensz, as follows:

That some days ago he called the wife of Jan van Hoesen a whore, with the result that from excitement she had a miscarriage; also, that yesterday, being the 14th of this month, he repeated the insult, while the wife lay sick in bed.

[In the margin is written:] Annetje, Constapel's wife,² says that she heard Capiteyn³ call her a whore when she lay already sick in bed.

He, Willem Jeuriaensz, says that the neighbors told him that he said it.

He declares that Willem Jeuriaensz told him that a while ago, to wit, on March 31, 1650, when he was last summoned and appeared before the court to pay for two cows which he had received, he, Willem Jeuriaensz, had a knife concealed in his sleeve, adding further that if the director had attempted to do anything to him, Willem, about the said payment, or any one had attacked him, he would have received a rip from him.

Jan van Hoesen declares that Willem Jeuriaensz has often and repeatedly said to him and accused him of it that the contract between them was fraudulently drawn, said contract being signed by Willem Jeuriaensz and Jan Fransz van Hoesen and acknowledged before B. v. Slichtenhorst, A: de Hooges, J: van Twiller, Goossen Gerritsz and Cornelis Teunisz.

As Johan van Twiller and Gerrit Vasterick are absent, the [case] aforesaid is adjourned until the 17th of July aforesaid at the usual time.

[57v] Extraordinary session, July 17 Anno 1650

The honorable director requests the corporal apprehension of Willem Jeuriaensz on account of the aforesaid crimes.

Annetje, the wife of Constapel, says that Volckje, when she had the miscarriage, said that it was caused by excitement, due to the abusive language of Willem Jeuriaensz.

Aertje Cornelis, the wife of Thomas Sandersz, smith, declares as above.

Willem Jeuriaensz, in contempt of the honorable court, says that he is a person of 21 years, whereas it is known to us that he is at least 70 years of age.

The commissioners and councilors consent to the corporal apprehension of Willem Jeuriaensz.

Delivered to Commissioner Johan van Twiller, for the honorable guardians of the patroon, three court records corresponding with [and extending] up to this [record].¹

Pursuant to the resolution of the commissioners and councilors and with the consent of the honorable director this court record is turned over to me, Antonio de Hooges, secretary of this place, on this date, the 17th of July Anno 1650.²

[58] Extraordinary session, July 18 Anno 1650

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Willem Jeuriaensz.

Whereas Willem Jeuriaensz on account of his rascality and misdeeds was on two separate occasions sentenced to leave the colony and banished forever, to wit, in the year 1644 and again

¹ drie Gerechts Rollen respondeerende tot op deese; apparently referring to the court records that were kept in the colony prior to the administration of Bant van Slichtenhorst, which are missing.

² This entry, taken in connection with the complaint made by de Hooges against Van Slichtenhorst on April 4, 1650, seems to indicate that Van Slichtenhorst had refused to let de Hooges have the custody of the record, but that at the latter's request the court directed that it be turned over to him. The minutes, both before and after this date, are in the handwriting of de Hooges, so that he must have had access to the record for the purpose of making his entries.

in September of the year 1647, which last time the delinquent petitioned the court to grant him a respite, pledging himself in said petition not to molest any one, either directly or indirectly, in or out of court, under penalty of forfeiting his property then in his possession or thereafter to be acquired and of being immediately sent out of the colony, as appears by the said petition, upon which petition a respite was granted in an apostil entered on the same, and whereas he has since pursued and more particularly now does pursue his former ways;

And whereas, secondly, he has unjustly accused many honest persons of having fraudulently drawn up the contract between him and Jan van Hoesen, and among others has impugned the honor of some members of this honorable court;

And whereas, thirdly, he has boasted that when he was summoned by the court to pay for the purchase of two cows he had a knife concealed in his sleeve and that if the plaintiff had laid hands upon him he would have cut him with it;

And whereas, furthermore, when he was summoned to appear to answer for these and other crimes, [58v] he did openly insult the honorable court of this place, saying to several people: "I invite you to the funeral; I am summoned before the court and must hang;" and further committed other rascalities;

Therefore, all this being taken into consideration, the plaintiff demands that the former sentences shall be put into effect and that in addition the delinquent shall be publicly exhibited on the scaffold for his crimes, to wit, that he shall be whipped and branded and that thereafter he shall be forever banished from the colony. Furthermore, that all his property and effects shall be confiscated and forfeited to the benefit of the honorable plaintiff.

[59]¹ The honorable commissioners and the council of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, having read the demand of the honorable director as plaintiff against Willem Jeuriaensz, baker, and having duly weighed and considered all that is therein set forth and to be considered, and finding:

That on account of his misdeeds he was before, on the 4th of February 1644, banished from the colony by the honorable court;

That afterwards, because he had attempted to stab the person of Antony de Hooges, then the patroon's comys, with a knife on the public road and thereby, as much as in him lay, had committed a murder, he was again banished from the colony on the 28th of August 1647, but on his petition granted a respite, under penalty of forfeiture of all property and banishment in case he should molest any one, whether in or out of court, or cause any annoyance deserving punishment;

And finding furthermore all that is set forth in the honorable plaintiff's conclusion, to wit:

That he, the delinquent, has so frightened and shocked a certain woman that according to her complaint she had a miscarriage;

Secondly, that he has unjustly accused and slandered honest people, among them some members of the honorable court of this place, in connection with the signing of the agreement between him [59v] and Jan van Hoesen, saying that they had drawn it up fraudulently;

Thirdly, that, having been called upon to pay for the purchase of two cows, he boasted on coming home that he had a knife concealed in his sleeve and that if he had been arrested on account of it, he would have paid the director with it;

Furthermore, having been summoned to answer for these enormous crimes, he has openly derided the honorable court here, saying to several people: "I invite you to the funeral; I am summoned before the court; I must hang."

Furthermore, we are assured by trustworthy people that he said to a certain woman who was about to partake of the Lord's Supper: "If it is a piece of bread you want, come to me, I will give it to you." And other rascalities.

So that he is a blasphemmer, a public nuisance, a murderer, as far as his intention is concerned, a person who holds the court and justice in contempt and a disturber of the common peace. The honorable court, aforesaid, therefore, have sentenced [60] and adjudged, as they sentence and adjudge hereby, that the former sentences concerning the banishment shall be carried out, so that he, Willem Jeuriaensz is hereby banished from the district and jurisdiction of this colony, henceforth and forever, with order to depart by the first vessel and never to return, on pain of corporal punishment. All cum expensis.

Thus sentenced and ratified in Collegio, this 18th day of July Anno 1650.

The aforesaid Michiel Jansz or his sureties are therefore once more peremptorily ordered, under penalty of having judgment given against them by default, to file an answer within two months from this date, and to support it with proper proof, and also to sign the two accounts which have been handed in.

Extract from a certain document

The son-in-law of Megapolensis, who has been a minister here and who was forbidden to preach by the Classis of Alcmæer, goes over with the same ship. In case he should attempt to perform any church service in the colony, we order Director Slichtenhorst not to employ him thereto or to tolerate him in the colony, about which we shall write him personally if time will permit it. And whereas we have been requested by the Deputies of the Classis of Amsterdam to make this known here, we hereby order the director and commissioners of our colony to carry out our instructions in this matter.

The name of the minister is Wilhelm [Grasmeer].

This order was contained in a letter to [Gerrit] Vasterick, sent to him by Wouter van Twiller.

We, the undersigned, attest and declare that we have seen and read a certain rough note (kladde) written by Gerrit Vasterick, purporting to be an extract from a letter concerning the minister, Grasmeer, to prevent him from preaching. Which copy, being neither collated with the original, nor authenticated or signed by any one, was unsatisfactory to Director B. v. Slichtenhorst, who said that one could take no action on such a scrap of paper. Whereupon the director, together with de Hooges and Ruth Jacobsz, went to the said Vasterick's house, where the director asked if it was not possible to get an authentic copy? Said Vasterick answered that he had given a copy. The director replied that it was not authentic and was not signed. Whereupon Vasterick made Jan van Twiller (for he, himself, lay sick in bed owing to some accident) get the letter. Having the letter in his hands, Vasterick demanded his former copy, which was handed to him without any suspicion, the plan being that de Hooges should make an extract from the letter for so far as the aforesaid matter was concerned. But Vasterick declined this and read some things from the letter, which de Hooges took down from his mouth. Having obtained this writing, we saw that we had been deceived by Vasterick's trick in demanding back his former copy, for it in no sense corresponded therewith. This much Vasterick let us see, that the letter was signed by Wouter van Twiller only and addressed to Vasterick alone. This is a true account of what took place and we offer if need be to confirm this on oath. Done in the colony of Rensselaerswyck, on the date above written.

B. V. SLICHTENHORST, director of the said colony

A. DE HOOGES, commissioner and secretary of the said colony
RUTGER JACOBSZ

[62] Hereupon their honors aforesaid and the other members of the court have resolved and decided as follows:

Whereas Vasterick, according to the foregoing attestation, is found guilty of fraudulency in writing, so that one does not know which copy is correct, or whether either of the two is to be accepted, as neither is properly copied, or compared (for one can read to another anything one pleases), much less authenticated;

And whereas, secondly, it is notorious that the disease which Vasterick has at present is of such a nature that he ought not to carry it from a whorehouse into a court of justice, this being a place for which such persons are unfit;

Therefore, their honors aforesaid, having noticed this, have firmly resolved not to allow him to sit on the bench until he has purged and cleared himself of the aforesaid charges and assured and convinced us of the contrary.

By order of their honors aforesaid,

A. DE HOOGES, Secretary

[62v] Special meeting, August 20 Anno 1650

Whereas the case of Claes Gerritsz was to come up this day, we have decided and thought it advisable to leave the differences between the honorable director and him to the decision and award of two impartial men to be appointed for that purpose, provided that the wages which are still due him, to wit, those which he earned in the employ of Brant Peelen, deceased, and Broer Cornelis, and on the Vlackte, shall remain as a pledge or security for the award to be rendered by the aforementioned persons.

Meeting of the inhabitants regarding the rumors of war concerning the Maquas, held on the 21st of September 1650

Information, as to what took place on the 21st of September 1650:

Rem Jansz, residing in Fort Orange, declares that on the 20th of September 1650, it happened that a certain Tapaen savage, at the house of Arent Andriesz, unasked and unexpectedly said to him: "You Dutchmen have now been selling guns long enough to the Maquas, for they came to us last summer and made presents in order that we should help them to kill you when the ice was on the water. They also went to the savages to the south and offered them a large nootas of seawan, whereupon they promised to lend them the helping hand."

Jacob Jansz Stol declares that the savage [63] said the same thing to him.

Albert Andriesz declares likewise and they say that when they asked him earnestly whether it was true, he said: "Come and take me and bind me fast and if it does not happen within the aforesaid time, then cut off my head.”¹

That this happened as above stated they declare here before the court in the presence of several inhabitants.

Whereas the need teaches us to adopt measures, we have granted permission to have the patroon's cannon, consisting of three pieces, to wit, a six-pounder, a five pounder and a three-pounder, used until further order in Fort Orange. But in order that the patroon may not be deprived of his property, the undersigned persons acknowledge that they have borrowed the aforesaid pieces on condition that the patroon or his agent may have them back whenever he needs them or it may suit his pleasure.

The insecurity of our lives and property oppresses us continually, living as we do under the unrestrained domination of inhuman people and cruel heathen. And while, indeed, we had some intimation of this last year, it shows itself particularly at present through evident indications and plausible predictions and earnest warnings which are communicated to us, not by the aforesaid parties, but by far distant Indians. Which being the case, although some think it advisable to have recourse to arms and resistance, and to exchange our weak position for that of their superior strength, their honors, the directors, commissioners and councilors, realizing the need, have resolved and determined, for Done in the colony, on the date above written.

A. DE HOGGES, Secretary¹

[64] The same date, we summoned Jan Labatie, inhabitant of Fort Orange, to come to the house of the director and requested him, as he is reasonably experienced in the use of the Maquas language, to consent to be likewise employed as an ambassador to the Maquas country, whereupon he replied that he would not do that for anything in the world. He was asked again why, and whether it was not better to embrace peace than to begin a war in which we could not possibly survive? Labatie answered that it mattered little to those in the fort how it went, whether it was war or peace.² Whereupon he left.

Before the meeting proceeded to business, the following took place:

Jacob Waelingen, after previous delay, insisting urgently that he be permitted to transport himself with his wife and children to the Manhatans to seek their advantage there, as they until now have not well been able to support themselves here, and it being evident that they can not be detained against their will, we have thought it to the best interest of the patroon to release him from all claims and demands and consequently have granted them permission to leave the colony and to seek their advantage wherever they please.

[65v] The 2d of October, Anno 1650, in the afternoon, the ambassadors left. Extraordinary session, November 28 Anno 1650

The honorable director and commissioners [of the colony] and the commissary of Fort Orange, Charles van Bruggen, having under pressure granted permission to a certain savage named *den Uyl*² to erect a small house to the north of the aforesaid fort, which tended to become a great nuisance to the colony as well as to the fort, Mons^r. Labatie, to do away with [the source of] former troubles, has this day bought said little house of him and paid for it, to which consent is given by us on condition that a proper recognition to the honorable patroon and the co-directors

ADRIAEN JANSZ,¹ witness

[66v] December 13 Anno 1650

Steven Jansz, carpenter, upon examination by the director, declares that on the 12th of this month a certain company of persons came to his house to drink, having played golf for brandy, which they drank there. And that one Teunis Jansz, sailmaker, accused the wife of said Steven Jansz of having erased two strokes at the same time, although she had tapped two glasses for it. Whereupon one Philip, the gunstock maker,² also took part in the dispute, wanting to have a voice in it.³ So that Gysbert Cornelisz, the tavernkeeper, got into a dispute with said Philip, saying among other things that they should not make such charges without being able to prove them, with the result that he, Gysbert, received a wound in his left breast, but does not know how it happened or who did it, as three or four persons were wrestling together.

[67] On the date aforesaid the honorable director attached the money in the hands of Jeuriaen Bestval which is due to Jochem Kettelheym, on account of a claim which the director

² Philip de Lademaecker. On page [70v] he is referred to as Philip Pietersz Laedemaecker, which would seem to identify him with Philip Pietersz Schuyler.

³ A marginal note, to be inserted at this point, reads as follows: Which made the wife of Steven Jansz very angry, whereupon Philip said: "Have your husband come!" So that Steven Jansz, after some words, struck said Philip with his fist on the forehead, whereupon they clinched.

has against said Jochem, for which Jochem is summoned to appear on Thursday after New Year. [Note in the margin:] 1st Default.

December 20 Anno 1650

Jacob Adriaensz and Claes Andriesz being categorically questioned by the director in regard to the fight which recently took place at the house of Steven Jansz, carpenter, answer as follows:

Claes Andriesz says that after Steven Jansz and Philip, the gunstock maker, had struck each other with their fists, Philip, going out of the door, challenged Gysbert, whereupon those who were inside held Gysbert fast, so that Philip came back into the house and got into a quarrel with Gysbert.

This, Jacob says also. And that in this turmoil Gysbert was wounded, that is to say, Philip knocked Gysbert down and when Gysbert got up again, he was wounded.

[67v] The aforesaid deponents declare that otherwise there was no trouble or dispute, except first between Steven Jansz and Philip and then between Philip and Gysbert.

Which, by handshake and true words, instead of an oath, they have declared to the director to have thus taken place.

The 27th day of December Anno 1650

The honorable director has this day arrested Philip, the gunstock maker, [to remain within the limits of] the colony under penalty of three hundred guilders, and appointed a week from next Thursday as the day on which he is to appear in court.

The same day, Philip has in the presence of Jacob Jansz Stol requested permission to go outside the [said limits of the] arrest into the fort, to which consent is given on condition that he promise to appear in person on the appointed day and to give security for the satisfaction of the judgment and the costs, [68] which being promised by him, permission is granted said Philip.

On the date aforesaid the honorable director has in like manner once more arrested Jacob Jansz Stol in the colony, in the first place to fulfil the contract between the late patroon and his predecessor, Hendrick Albertsz, deceased, and furthermore to answer for all his crimes committed to this day, and also appointed the 5th of January Anno 1650 as the day on which he is to appear in court, but notwithstanding the arrest he has without giving bail gone outside the jurisdiction of the colony into the fort, in contempt of the liberties¹ obtained.

Aert Jacobsz was summoned on December 14, 1650, to appear on January 5, Anno 1651, on account of his dispute with Jan Helms.

Abraham Stevens Croaet, on December 15th, summoned for the second time to appear on the above court day.

Christoffel Davits summoned for the second time to appear on the above court day.

Cornelis Cornelisz van Voorhout summoned to appear on the above court day.

December 22, Gysbert Cornelisz from Weesp is granted the garden heretofore used by Carsten Carstensz at one beaver yearly, on condition that [68v] whenever the honorable masters need it, he will have to give it up, subject to reimbursement for his outlay.

- 1 January 1651 Seger Cornelisz, Peter, the Frenchman, and Jan Tyssen summoned to appear on the 5th of this month, at nine o'clock.
- 2 ditto Egbert Sanders's servant, Jem;² Toenis Cornelisz. On the 3d, Henrick Driesz, Mr Rutger Jacobsz' servant.
- 3 ditto Jan Helmsz summoned in writing, in the name of the patroon, against Aert Jacobsz.

B. v. Slichtenhorst, director, plaintiff, against Jacob Jansz Stol, defendant.

[Plaintiff demands] whether he, Stol, is willing to carry out all the provisions of the contract dated June 7, 1642, of his predecessor, Hendrick Albertsz, deceased, and [continued] after his death, and if so, to give security for the satisfaction of the judgment.¹

Jacob Jansz says that he submits himself to the arbitral judgment of impartial men and the director.

1648, May 30 For having struck Hans Vos, when he suspected no harm, on the forehead with his fist and in addition spoken evil of the director aforementioned.

For the defamation. fl. 10: -

And for the blow with the fist, according to the ordinance dated

December 7, 1649, also. fl. 10: -

All cum expensis.

[69] 1648, June 6, Jacob Jansz fought against Andries Constapel with his fists, at the house of Gysbert Cornelisz, tavernkeeper, for which he forfeits fl. 10:-

1648, July 6, Jacob Jansz, on his own authority, cut down two logs (masts), up above, in the patroon's wood, and had them hauled to the strand, where they were attached, notwithstanding which he shipped them on the 8th ditto out of this jurisdiction, thereby acting in utter contempt of the court.

The honorable plaintiff, therefore, demands that he be arbitrarily punished, as an example to others. Also, that he pay the patroon for the timber and for violating the attachment, fl. 50, according to the ordinance and custom of the Manhatans, all cum expensis.

1648, December 27, Jacob Jansz was fined for having with some other persons been drinking at the house of Gysbert Cornelisz during divine service.

1649, June 2, Jacob Jansz, without cause, threw a tankard at Hans Vos, the court messenger, smashing his face, so that for two months he could not perform his duties, for which according to the ordinance of the Manhatans he has forfeited the sum of fl. 300, all cum expensis.

[69v] 1649, August 4, Jacob Jansz again removed a log (mast), for which he forfeits the amount above stated.

1649, 11 ditto, he struck Willem Jeuriaensz on his back with a tankard, at the house of Gysbert Cornelisz, for which he forfeits fl. 10.

And because Abraham Pietersz, carpenter, wanted to prevent it, he struck him on the head, for which is due fl. 10:

1650, September 29, he fought with Pieter Hertgerts and struck de Hooges on the left eye with his fist, and greatly injured the thumb of Volckert Hansz in his own house, all of which took place in the presence of the honorable fiscal, for which he has incurred the double penalty.

And for contempt of court, in ignoring the attachment and summons, the same fine as above.

1650, December 12, he struck Gysbert Cornelisz, tavernkeeper, and Claes Andriesz with a golf club at the house of Steven Jansz, for which, together, he forfeits. fl. 20:—

And whereas the aforesaid Jacob Jansz was summoned and arrested in the colony and in violation thereof has gone outside the limits of the aforesaid jurisdiction, without giving bail, the honorable plaintiff maintains that he has forfeited the sum of fl. 20 [and demands] that he give security for the satisfaction of the judgment or sentence.

[70] Court proceedings, January 5 Anno 1651

It being taken into consideration that Mons^r. Arent van Curler as far back as the arrival of the honorable director was nominated as commissioner (gecommitteerde), but by serious obstacles has until this date been prevented from taking office,¹ he has on this highly pressing occasion accepted the same and consequently taken the proper oath before the honorable director.

Whereas the annual term [of office] of Goossen Gerritsz has expired and he for some important reasons urgently requests to be discharged, we have, recognizing [the justice of] the same, granted his request and discharged him, thanking him hereby for his faithful service.

And in his place are nominated Jan Verbeeck and Pieter Hertgers.

Regarding the question at issue between Aert Jacobsz and Jan Helms, it is adjudged that each shall pay a fine of seventy-five guilders, cum expensis.

[70v] Philip Pietersz, gunstock maker, requests delay until the next court day, which is granted him on condition that he give security for the satisfaction of the judgment.

Jan Labatie offers himself as surety for the judgment.

Whereas the annual ordinance concerning the shooting at night mentions in general, but not in particular, the shooting on New Year's eve;

And whereas, secondly, the renewal of the said ordinances has recently been neglected;

It is decided that the New Year shooters shall for this time be excused, without prejudice to the director's action against those who fired during the service.

Decision rendered by:

ARENT VAN CURLER
ANTONY DE HOGES
RUTGER JACOBSZ
GOOSSEN GERRITZ

The honorable director appeals from the above decision.

Cornelis Cornelisz van Voorhout summoned by the director.

Abraham Stevens denies that he drew his knife on Jan Carstensz, but admits that he fought with him.

Teunis Cornelisz denies that he fired his gun at New Year during the night.

[71] [Marginal note in the handwriting of van Slichtenhorst:] 9 ditto, Jochem Kettelheym summoned again to appear on the 12th.

January 10, 1651

Hans Vos complains that Dirck *de Gojer*¹ has threatened to assault him at Catskil and that he understood from said Dirck that he had given orders to Claes Andriesz and Jacob Lambertsz, Gojers,² some time when they saw him here in the colony, to do the same.

² The same as Gooiers, or Gooilanders, meaning men from the Gooi, or Gooiland, a district in the southeastern part of the province of North Holland, Netherlands.

Whereupon an injunction is served on said Dirck to refrain, on pain of corporal punishment, from molesting Hans Vos either by word or deed.

And Jan Dircksz van Bremen is authorized to serve the notice on said Dirck in the name of the patroon.

Furthermore, the director is to forbid Claes Andriesz and Jacob Lambertsz [to molest Hans Vos] under the penalty above mentioned.

[71v] Court proceedings, January 12 Anno 1650

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Jochem Kettelheym, defendant.

Jochem admits it.

~ 1648, July 12, Jochem Kettelheym and Thomas Chamber three several times struck each other with fists, so that their noses and mouths bled, and that on a Sunday, in sight of the director, for which they have incurred the triple penalty of fl. 10 each, according to the ordinance of May 28, 1648, amounting together to fl. 30:-

December 27, Jochem confessed that during divine service he had been sitting [in the tavern], drinking brandy with Flodder,¹ the Noorman,² Capitayn,³ and Rem, the smith,⁴ for which according to the ordinance of May 28, 1648, and that of the Manhatans, is due fl. 6:-

1651, January 9, summoned and must first purge himself before he can be heard.

[72] The honorable director, plaintiff, against Cornelis Cornelisz van Voorhout, defendant.

1649, June 20, the defendant fought with the Raemaecker (wheelwright) with fists, in the presence of Hans Vos and others at the house of Gysbert, the tavernkeeper, for which each has forfeited the sum of fl. 10:—

✓ Drew his knife on Christoffel Davits, for which he has forfeited fl. 100:—

April 17, Jan van Bremen complained about the defendant on account of violence and blows, for which is due a double fine, first on account of the matter complained of and secondly because it happened at night, @ fl. 10. fl. 40:—

November 7, he fought with Thomas Chamber, using his fists; due. fl. 10:—

it took place in Gysbert's house.

1650, September 30, the defendant, without any reason or lawful cause, struck Jan Labatie in the lavatory of Gysbert Cornelisz with his fists, for which he must pay the double fine. fl. 20:—

1651, January 5. Kit Davits summoned.

January 10. Summoned [again].

January 11, 1651, the director has notified and summoned the newly nominated members of the court, to wit, Pieter Hertgers and Jan Verbeeck, to take the proper oath and on this date in their official capacity to enter upon their duties.

Baerent Pietersz, having been summoned by the director on January 11, 1649, to show where he each year bought his wheat, answers that he requests an order from the court that he must do so. To which the director replies that if he to-day brings in his proof, he will not have [his account?] reduced.

[72v] Cornelis Cornelisz Vos, being summoned to find out who on New Year's eve during the service fired off guns in front of his door, answers that he does not know. Being asked who were at Harmen Bastiaenz's, he answers, seven or eight persons.

This day, Jan Verbeeck has taken the proper oath as a member of the court (gerechtspersoon) and is admitted by the court.

Marten Harmensz having been granted a lot in the village (byeenwooning) to build there, promises that he will not have any intercourse or dealings with any private traders, namely, with those of the fort.

Teunis Jacobsz and his wife, being summoned by the director about 1 1/8 loot (5/8 ounce) of gold found by them, declare that they found it behind the homestead (hofste) of Gysbert, the tavernkeeper, and sold it to Gerrit Vasterick for fl. 18, without knowing who lost it.

Which gold being examined by the court here is found to be purified and partly engraved gold.

The director having thereupon submitted the question whether it is to be kept for the benefit of the patroon and the co-directors, or to be restored to Vasterick;

It is resolved that it shall be returned to Gerrit Vasterick.

[73] It is further considered necessary, as thus far little attention has been paid to the maintenance of public roads, to the great inconvenience and even danger of the inhabitants here, that some bridges be built, to wit, one across the first kill, in the village (byeenwooning), with railings and benches to sit on; one across the third kill; one across the beaver kill, with railings; and a wagon bridge around the rear (een rybruch achterom). Also, that a convenient staircase be built on the outside of the church (een bequaeme trap aende kerck worde gemaecht).

The honorable director, plaintiff, against Jacob Lambertsz, defendant.

On the 9th of October 1650, Jacob Lambertsz, being armed, with a sword on his side, dared by word and deed, on the Hoogen Berch, in the highest manner to insult the director, who came there with Steven Jansz, carpenter, to perform his duties, without giving any reason or occasion thereto in the least. In the presence of Teunis Dircksz and Gysbert aende Berch, he wanted to compel the director, first, to drink with him and then to fight a duel with him. Furthermore, he used such vile language about the court, his past crimes, and his arrest, that one can not well put it down with the pen, saying he would [73v] wipe his Gooiland . . . with it and that he had enough of the director and all the gentlemen, so that finally Teunis Dircksz and Gysbert had to take Jacob away.

He has likewise insulted de Hooges and also Hans Vos.

Which things in a land of justice can not go unpunished, it being intolerable that one should thus, without any reason whatever, rudely assail one's lawful superiors and their servants and even threaten to do them harm, where (as in the case of the delinquent) the court has shown such leniency in imposing sentence.

The honorable plaintiff, therefore, in the first place requests [a warrant for the] corporal apprehension [of the defendant].

Teunis Dircksz, Gysbert aende Berch and Tys Evertsz declare that Jacob Lambertsz carried a sword on his side and that on coming down the hill he said to the director: "You carry a sword? I do too. If you are an officer, I am one also." That meanwhile they had together drawn out the manure for Gysbert and that for fun they had made said Jacob out to be the officer.

Which by handshake instead of an oath they declare to have thus taken place.

[Here follow two or three lines which have become illegible.]

[74] About midsummer anno 1649, the honorable general being here, he requested Jan Baerentsz to haul out some logs (masts), which he refused, saying that the horses and the land which he had in use belonged to the patroon, so that he first ought to have consent thereto. Whereupon the honorable general came to the director and after relating the aforesaid conversation requested that permission might be given, whereupon consent was given by the director.

Also, Jan Labatie, having been written to by the honorable general to send him a certain negro residing at the house of Broer Cornelis, he came to the director's house to request in the first place permission to apprehend the aforesaid negro and in the second place that the director would assist him, Labatie, in making the arrest, whereupon the director gave said Labatie permission and lent him the helping hand in making the arrest.

[74v] Steven Jansz, carpenter, being asked by the director whether at any time he received any beer from said director to retail it;

Secondly, whether he ever asked and received permission from the director to tap;

Answers, that he never received any beer from the director and he tapped without previous consent.

Steven Jansz has declared this by handshake, with true words, instead of an oath, to be as stated.

This 18th day of January Anno 1651.

[75] Court proceedings January 19 Anno 1651

This day Pieter Hartgerts has taken the oath of member of the court (Gerechts persoon) before the director and is admitted as such.

Upon the request of Andries de Vos what the director has to say against his brother-in-law, Baerent Pietersz, the director answers that he sent 93 1/2 schepels of wheat to the mill and that he got back but 74 schepels.

The director says that he deserves more credence than a thief. Whereupon Andries de Vos says: "You may be that yourself."

Andries de Vos says with reference to Ruth Jacobsz and Jan Verbeeck . . . [the remainder of the page is blank].

[75v] Extraordinary session, January 20 Anno 1651

November 25, 1648, Thomas Chamber reported that one of his cows had been shot dead in the wood by the savages.

Also, November 14, 1649, Thomas aforesaid again reported that a mare was shot dead by the savages.

Proof hereof follows, according to the contract:

Jan Andriesz from Dublin and Thomas Heggens declare before the court that they found the cow that was killed in the woods, the horns being cut off, the bowels removed, the fat cut away, a piece cut out of the belly and the rest being left lying in the woods, about which complaint was made at the time by Thomas Chamber to the director.

They declare this by handshake, with true words instead of an oath, to be a fact.

Jan Andriesz from Dublin and Poulus Jansz from Gorcum declare that they found the aforesaid mare lying dead in the woods, having been shot through the soft part of the belly.

This the witnesses declare in the manner as above, in the presence of,

The honorable director

Arent van Curler

and myself,

A. DE [HOOGES, Secretary]

[76] Whereas some dispute has arisen between Director Brant van Slichtenhorst and Jacob Jansz Stol about the contract made between the late patroon and Hendrick Albertsz, deceased, concerning the beaver trade mentioned in said contract, and finding that he, Jacob Jansz, can have no knowledge of the aforesaid trade of his predecessor;

Secondly, that it is commonly known that he, Hendrick Albertsz, deceased, made it his special business to work and not to trade;

And that, owing to the aforesaid obscurity, no solution can be found except by submitting the question to the decision of impartial men, the following persons have been chosen thereto by both sides, to wit: Mons^r. Arent van Curler, Antony de Hooges, Mr Abraham Staas and Evert Pels; who, after careful consideration of everything, have decided that for the aforesaid trade until the death of the aforesaid predecessor, including the trade of the said Jacob Jansz for the period of about eight months in the year 1648, there is due fl. 36:— wherewith all claims and demands on account of the aforesaid contract shall be settled and released.

[76v] Court proceedings, January 26 Anno 1651

It is decided that Thomas Chamber by virtue of his contract shall have the right to use the pasturage specified therein for the grazing of his own cattle, without charge.

As, also in accordance with the contract, he proved on January 20, 1651, that the savages killed a horse and a cow, he is by virtue thereof entitled to have them replaced by others without compensation.

Teunis

first
default. The honorable director, plaintiff, against Teunis Dirksz and Cornelis Teunisz van Westbroeck, in their capacity as administrators of the estate of the late Cornelis Maesz, defendants.

First The same, against Teunis Dircksz in particular, about insults offered to the honorable director.

[77] Whereas a question has arisen between the honorable director, Brant van Slichtenhorst, and Baerent Pietersz, the cases of both parties are dismissed, without prejudice to the good name and reputation of either. Thus done in collegio, on the date above written.

Jacob Lambertsz, defendant.

First
default.

[The rest of the page is blank.]

[77v] Brant van Slichtenhorst, director of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, plaintiff, against Teunis Dircksz, defendant.

Whereas by virtue of their oath and the orders of the honorable patroon the gentlemen [of the court] of the aforesaid colony are required and commanded to see to it that all the farmers each year, in accordance with their contract, render an itemized account and statement [of everything], inclusive even of the fur trade, and make payment, and this not in gross, but in detail, the said defendant has thus far failed to do so, notwithstanding the aforesaid gentlemen, as often as twice a year, by public ordinance (in addition to many verbal reminders by the said plaintiff) have given abundant warning that every one must within certain days deliver an account in writing with the vouchers thereof to the director aforesaid and that no one may transport out of the colony, or even remove from one place to another, any grain, boards, or other effects until and before the honorable patroon or his director are satisfied, on pain of confiscation of the grain and effects as provided by said ordinance and of paying in addition a fine of fl. 25 for each default. This does especially apply to those who have an open account, like this defendant, who is bound to render an account of the years 1638 and 1639, as well as of the building done by him and the farm implements and grain which he received as former farm hand of the honorable patroon. Also, as farmer, from the year 1640 to 1648, with the fl. 16 for each farm hand. Furthermore, for the years 1649 and 1650, according to the agreement of March 17, 1650, of the patroon's common property, which the defendant leased at a public bidding for fl. 500 a year, in addition to the tithes and recognition, according to the conditions of September 14, 1648. Furthermore, the defendant, in the year 1648, promised to pay for tithes 28 schepels of wheat and 28 schepels of oats and in the years 1649 and 1650 the defendant managed on his own authority, without the knowledge of the director, much less of the commissioners, to appropriate the lord's tithes, and to keep to himself all the rent, tithes and the patroon's common property and disposes thereof as if they were his own, contrary to the patroon's prohibition, as appears on folio 50 of the court record, and only seeks his own profit and tries to cheat the patroon out of his lawful property [78] and possessions. And even dares boldly and without shame, in the presence of the director and Domine Megapolensis, to assert that he paid fl. 9000, in return for which he, the defendant, received but fl. 2000, as was done even lately, on May 8, 1650. Which, indeed, is putting it on altogether too thick and quite incredible.

Furthermore, apart from the aforesaid ordinances, the honorable plaintiff, in the name of the patroon, attached in the year 1649 the defendant's grain, both threshed and unthreshed, forbidding the same to be removed, much less to be transported out of the colony before the defendant had rendered his lawful accounting and statement as aforesaid. Notwithstanding this, contrary to and in spite of all this, the defendant has carted the grain past the director's door and last year furnished two lasts of wheat to Hendrick, the baker, and others. Also, on April 21, 1650, he caused skipper Jan de Kaeper to take 401 schepels of oats and in the fall, on November 14, 160 schepels of oats to the Manhatans, and further on his own authority alienated all his grain.

And when the director by proper judicial proceedings tries to prevent it, he, the defendant, calls said director a thief and a rescal and, if the plaintiff had not prevented it, would, on February 16, 1650, in the morning, at about 9 o'clock, as the director was busy writing in his own office, have stabbed him with his own pen knife in the presence of his own son and the director's two [grand] children.¹ Which aforesaid deeds, neither can nor ought to be suffered to go unpunished. Therefore, as the defendant has not only defied the director and this honorable court and violated their ordinances as well as the Freedoms lawfully obtained by the honorable patroon from their High Mightinesses, but also gravely offended the Lords States General whose place is likewise occupied here, the honorable plaintiff, in view of all these circumstances, demands:

In the first place, that the defendant shall within a specified time be peremptorily ordered to render his lawful account, [78v] under penalty of judgment by default and such damages (and he would not have it happen again for ten thousand guilders) as the plaintiff in his capacity shall reckon to have suffered, with costs, and without prejudice to the former fines.

Secondly, that all the grain delivered, sent away, removed or shipped by the defendant during the years 1648, 1649 and 1650 shall be confiscated by virtue of the aforesaid ordinance. And furthermore that the defendant be condemned to pay the full amount of all the fines which in accordance with said ordinance he has incurred to this date, [the plaintiff] requesting security for the satisfaction of the judgment, all with costs.

Finally, that he be made to pay the rent and toepacht of the six morgens of land for the year 1650, and as surety for Jan Helms also be made to pay his rent and toepacht for 1650, with costs.

¹The will of Gerrit van Slichtenhorst, dated Oct. 12, 1683, proved Sept. (Dec.?) 29, 1685 (N. Y. Hist. Soc., Collections, 1892, 25:170, 470-471), mentions seven children: Alida, wife of Peter Davids Schuyler, Elizabeth, wife of Nicholas William Stuyvesant, Bata, wife of Jan Oost, Helagont, Gerrit, Rachel and Yonde. Two of the younger children, Gerrit and Gouda, or Hillegonda, afterwards moved to the Dutch colony of Surinam. See De Navorscher, 1918, 67:436-37.

The same demand the director likewise makes in regard to the defendant and Cornelis Teunisz van Westbroeck, in their capacity of guardians of the minor children of Cornelis Maessen, deceased.

Director Brant van Slichtenhorst, plaintiff, against Teunis Dircksz van Vechten, defendant, for slander.

Whereas the defendant, on the first of February 1650, when the plaintiff in his official capacity came to the house of Cornelis Teunisz van Breuckelen to make an inventory of the patroon's cattle, in the presence of nearly all the authorities of the colony and of Fort Orange, the Domine and about ten witnesses, dared 16 or 17 separate times greatly to abuse the plaintiff, saying: "Are you to be our director and ruler? You are an old, gray thief and a rascal and you have stolen my own property and I shall prove it," adding thereto all sorts of abuse and this without any cause or occasion for it. Which slanderous remarks the plaintiff brought to the attention of the court and for which the defendant is now [79], the 2d of this month, summoned to appear before the full court, but does not appear, so that in the first place proof of his statements is demanded as before.

Secondly, the defendant, on December 19, 1649, and again on February 16, 1650, at the house of Pieter Bronck likewise slandered the plaintiff (and also called Domine Megapolensis an informer, as appears more at large by the bill of complaint), which slander the said plaintiff has taken much to heart, being a person of good reputation and character, who neither in his private nor in his official capacity is willing to suffer such injury for anything under the sun and which in a land of justice should not go unpunished, it being intolerable that people should thus fail to respect their lawful authorities, both ecclesiastical and civil.

The honorable plaintiff concludes therefore that the defendant for such repeated, public, deliberate, false and lying accusation must and ought to be punished as an example to others.

Furthermore, that for all the aforesaid slanders he shall make honorable and pecuniary amends, as follows: In the first place, that he shall appear before the entire court and resting on his bare knees pray God, the court and the director for forgiveness; that he shall then with his right hand slap his mouth and say as many times as he has slandered with it, "Mouth, thou hast spoken falsely and lyingly." And that for each slander he shall in addition be condemned to pay a fine of fl. 300, two thirds thereof to be for the director and one third for the poor, in accordance with the ordinance of May 28, 1648; and that furthermore he shall be punished as stated above, all cum expensis, the plaintiff demanding security for the judgment.

The defendant, some time ago, in crossing the river with Domine Megapolensis, likewise, without any reason whatever, addressed many vile words to the Domine, who at the time was an estimable minister here in the colony, making him out to be an informer and a rascal [79v] and, after having uttered said slander, crowded in upon the minister with the intention of stabbing him unexpectedly with a knife, so that the minister upon his approach warned the defendant not to come nearer, or he would hit him with a piece of wood on the side of his head in such a way that he would fall out of the boat into water.

And as the defendant has not been able to prove the aforesaid charges, he must be regarded as a slanderer, who in addition has committed assault and violence, for which according to the ordinance of May 28, 1648, he is liable to a fine of fl. 150, and as the same took place on Sunday, the double amount according to the ordinance, or fl. 300, and for drawing his knife, fl. 100, according to the ordinance of the Manhatans, amounting in all to . . . fl. [blank]; all cum expensis.

Furthermore, the plaintiff has summoned the defendant to obtain payment of the stipulated *toepachten*¹ for the year 1648, in addition to the tithes and the amount in cash stipulated in the contract of September 14, 1648; together with the toepachten for the years 1649 and 1650, at fl. [blank] a year, all cum expensis.

The defendant, furthermore, has dared to put an exorbitant price on his and the patroon's earliest grain, selling the mudde at eleven guilders, which is a violation of the patroon's ordinance, it being the particular duty of the commissioners and the court to prevent that any one fix the price of the grain in such a way as to oppress the poor people and his fellow men as much as is in his power; for which offense he is liable to the patroon's highest fine.

[80] September 18, 1648, Teunis Dircksz ordered Willem Menten four times in succession to fire a musket in the brewery during the night, by which repeated shooting those of the fort and in the colony were quite startled and frightened, thinking that it was an alarm; whereupon those in the fort returned the firing, as a signal that they would come to the rescue, and Mons^r. Labatie with some soldiers, who were assigned to the task of pulling down the houses in the *Fuyck*¹ and who were ordered to go, during the night sailed across the river to relieve them. When Mons^r. Labatie and the aforesaid soldiers came into the Grenenbos, Teunis Dircksz gave them six gallons and a half barrel of beer for their trouble. For which improper shooting by night, he has forfeited for each time the sum of fl.10, according to the ordinance of October 16, 1648, and in addition is to be arbitrarily punished as an example to others. All cum expensis.

The 19th ditto, Teunis Dircksz called Teunis Cornelisz a rascal and a thief and in addition beat him in his own house ¹The Dutch name for a funnel shaped hoopnet. The name may originally have been applied to the houses in the immediate vicinity of the fort, which were built along convergent lines, as distinguished from the term byeenwoning, which in this record is used repeatedly to designate the entire village. It is interesting to note that on the island of Curaçao, in the Dutch West Indies, there is a harbor called de Fuyck, which is referred to by de Laet as early as 1644. See his Historie ofte Iaerlijck Verhael van de Verrichtinghen der Geoctroyeerde West-Indische Compagnie, p. 436. Cf. also *Doc. rel. to Col. Hist. N. about the head with his fists and pulled the hair out of his head, because he had hired the six morgens of land which the commissioners in leasing his land had kept to themselves, which attempt to give the patroon's property a bad name and make it useless is a matter of serious import and consequence, for which he has forfeited the sum of fl. 10 for each excess, to wit, first, for calling him a rascal, secondly a thief, thirdly, for having struck him with his fists, and fourthly for pulling his hair and trying to make the patroon's property useless, amounting together to fl. 40:— and in addition, arbitrary correction.

In May 1649, the defendant fought, first with Pieter Hertgers, and then with Mr Abraham Staas, with fists, at their house in the brewery, for which he has forfeited fl.10 each, or fl.20:—, all cum expensis.

[80v] February 21, 1649, Teunis Dircksz was fined because he let a sleigh with two horses in very cold weather stand without food or cover before the door of Jan Verbeeck, for which according to the ordinance he has forfeited, for the first time, the sum of fl. 3:—

Director Brant van Slichtenhorst, plaintiff, against Seger Cornelisz, defendant.

Whereas the defendant, on December 23, 1648, before the full court, acknowledged his signature affixed to the contract of August 25, 1643, upon which acknowledgement, as appears on folio 21 of the court record, he was condemned to fulfill all the terms of the contract, which has since expired, it follows that the defendant must deliver in the first place, the house, brew house, three hay barracks, hogpen, wagon, plow, harrows, harness, and furthermore all the farm implements, horses, cows and hogs, according to the inventory, information and contract made with vander Donck in the year 1646, all in good condition and wall and roof tight,¹ according to the plain language of the contract, which the patroon will not suffer any one to misconstrue or interpret otherwise than it stands, and which reads as follows: "The patroon shall to begin with provide [the buildings] at his expense, provided that the farmer shall thereafter at his expense maintain them and keep them in repair, and at the expiration of the lease deliver them back in as good condition as he received them." Nota. For which the defendant is asked to give security or, in default thereof, to go under arrest.

¹At this point is written in the margin: "2d, must deliver in good condition the number of animals and the aforesaid farm tools; 3d, the buildings; 4th, or, in case of failure, the honorable plaintiff will count the loss at fl. 1500, plus damages and costs."

[81] Also, that the defendant within a short time shall comply with and satisfy the judgment of August 12, 1649, in regard to his refusal to have an appraisal made of the patroon's own buildings, under penalty of arrest, for the first time.

Also, payment for the 23 morgens of wheat appraised at fl. 75, with interest at 10% until full payment is made, as is customary here, and also to give security therefor.

Whereas all the colonists have each year, sometimes twice, by publicly posted notices been warned that every one must deliver to the director his account in writing, for each year separately, with the necessary vouchers, the defendant nevertheless obstinately remains in default to render his account for the years 1644, 1645, 1646 and 1647, under the penalty provided by the ordinance, and is to pay the balance agreed upon on March 3, 1650, and to give security therefor.

Also, the defendant, last year, on his own authority, appropriated the patroon's tithes, without once notifying thereof the director, much less the commissioners, for which he has forfeited for each morgen 4 schepels of wheat, according to the regulations made by the late patroon in regard to the tithes, in addition to the value of the same.

Furthermore, the defendant has dared daily to have teaming done with the patroon's horses, which were entrusted to him only to do his farm work with, employing thereto one, two and even three horses at a time, as the plaintiff himself has seen, in violation of the ordinance of March 31, 1649.

The plaintiff, therefore, demands that the defendant be condemned to render within a specified time an account of his illegitimate gains; that [81v] the halfe of said gains shall be declared to be for the benefit of the honorable patroon and that he alone, without loss to the patroon, shall be required to make good the damage suffered on account of the horses that are stiff, crippled, lame, blind, dead or drowned; the plaintiff maintaining further that the defendant ought to be arbitrarily punished for having misused the property that was entrusted to him; all cum expensis.

Also, that the defendant be ordered within a definite time to make a correct return of all the beer that was brewed by him and to pay therefore one guilder per barrel, according to the ordinance of the honorable patroon.

Andries de Vos, having been requested to act as assistant to the guardians of the orphans of the late Cornelis Maessen, accepts the appointment before the court.

Upon the petition of Andries de Vos, praying to be released [from his contract] regarding the use of the water and the building of a mill in the vicinity of the farm of Thomas Chamber, on account of the difficulties and inconveniences connected therewith, as shown in a previous remonstrance, his reasons are accepted by us at their face value and admitted to be valid; consequently, fiat is entered upon his petition.

Willem Jeuriaensz acknowledges his signature to his contract dated May 7, 1638.

Upon the petition of Jan Thomasz and Volckert Hansz, praying payment of what is due to them by the honorable patroon, the following serves for apostil: If they render a true account, statement and proof of what is coming to them from the honorable patroon, they will be satisfied to that amount in goods of the honorable patroon.

Jacob Adriaensz summoned to pay land rent of the year 1648.

The term of the lease of the homestead of Casper Jacobsz shall commence at Amsterdam fair¹ anno 1651.

Teunis Dircksz agrees to answer the director's complaint in two weeks, provided that a copy be handed to him.

Cornelis Segersz is likewise granted a delay of two weeks, precisely.

As to the attachment, Cornelis Segersz promises here before the court that he will deliver to the honorable director four hundred schepels of wheat, on condition that he to whom anything shall turn out to be due by settlement of accounts, shall receive it.

March 7, 1651, the Honorable Director Slichtenhorst attached the threshed and unthreshed grain of [Claes Segersz?] for the payment of the patroon's highest fine.

On the same date and in like manner the director attached the grain of Jeuriaen Bestval and also summoned him in order to secure payment for the years 1649 and 1650.

The 11th ditto, Cornelis Segersz was summoned in his capacity of lessee for the payments as above on account of Claes Segersz.

[83] Cornelis Segersz having appeared in court on the 2d day of March aforesaid, after receipt of the complaint brought against him by the honorable director, and having been asked by the plaintiff whether he had answered it, he replied that he did not consider himself sufficiently able to refute the same and requested that for lack of advocates or attorneys a member of the court might be appointed defensoris loco to answer the same. The honorable members of the court, therefore, having duly considered the defendant's request and not seen fit to reject it, but on the contrary wishing to grant his just request, have after some controversy and opposition finally ordered and directed Antonio de Hooges to undertake the task. Which the said de Hooges (as in duty bound to their honors aforesaid) has accepted, upon this special condition that he should not become involved in the suit. Whereupon the honorable plaintiff suggested [that he accept the appointment] without prejudice to his honor and oath, which the said attorney promised. [85v] Extraordinary session, September 6, 1651

As to the question which has arisen between Pieter Bronck and Joost Teunisz from Norden;

Whereas, on receiving an order on Jan van Bremen, Joost Teunisz turned over to Pieter Bronck the obligation between them, which amounts to giving a receipt, but whereas Joost Teunisz has not yet received the fifty guilders, owing to the fact that to this date he has not been at the house of Jan van Bremen for that purpose, and we are informed that at the time the order was made out the money was ready, it is adjudged that Joost Teunisz must provisionally seek to recover the amount from the aforesaid Jan van Bremen and in case for some time to come there is no likelihood of payment, Pieter Bronk must secure payment before he may receive the balance of his own account from Jan van Bremen.

As to the costs of the extraordinary session, amounting to fl. 18:10, Joost Teunisz is condemned to pay two thirds, or fl. 12:10, and Pieter Bronck one third, or fl. 6:—

[86] As to the defamation, Joost Teunisz declares before the court that he has nothing to say against Pieter Bronck that reflects on his honor or virtue, if he only gets his pay.

As to the calling of names, which Joost had no right to, as he should have let the court settle their difference, he is condemned to make reparation by paying a fine of eight guilders to the director and two guilders to the poor.

As to the matter in dispute between Jacob Jansz Flodder, plaintiff, and Hendrick Andriesz, defendant, the court has thought best to call in two impartial person to examine the boards and to determine whether they are merchantable, or not, to which purpose are appointed the following persons, namely: Mr Abram Pietersz¹ and Harman Bastiaensz, who are to make their report to the court, which shall then adjudge the matter as it shall see fit.

Whereas Jacob Jansz Flodder sold a certain quantity of boards to Hendrick Andriesz, which were to be merchantable and now form the subject of a dispute because the delivery is said to have taken place out of season, the honorable court has thought fit to refer the matter to Harman Bastiaensz and Willem Fredericksz Bout, to examine said boards and to determine

[93] Extraordinary session, November 4 Anno 1651

The honorable court of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, having seen and examined and carefully considered all the documents in the proceedings carried on between Director Brant van Slichtenhorst, as plaintiff, on one side, and Michiel Jansz, as defendant, on the other side, with the continuation thereof by Notary Dirck Schelluyne, as attorney, have adjudged and decided, as they hereby do adjudge and decide, that the defendant, or his sureties in the matter, shall tender and pay to the honorable plaintiff the sum of two thousand nine hundred and fifty-four guilders, and eleven stivers, the receipt of which, clear, by balance of accounts, the defendant (as appears by his signature), has acknowledged in court. The just half thereof, that is, fourteen hundred and seventy-seven guilders and five stivers, eight pence, the defendant, or his sureties, are ordered to pledge within the space of six weeks after the date hereof.

Likewise, for three horses received by him, which the defendant took with him at his departure [from the colony], valued at one hundred and fifty-six guilders and ten stivers each, amounting to the sum of four hundred and sixty-nine guilders, ten stivers, the defendant, or his sureties, are ordered to pledge the amount aforesaid as above.

As to any further lawful claims which the defendant may have aside from the liquid assets mentioned in his aforesaid account, he is once more ordered to present proof thereof before the first of May anno 1652, under penalty of judgment by default, and in case upon examination by the court said claims are found to be properly proven, they will be credited to the defendant's account.

Furthermore, the defendant is condemned in the sum of thirty guilders for the costs of this extraordinary session.

they on this day, the date above written, appeared to settle the differences between them and in view of the limited powers of the arbitrators have jointly and severally agreed and contracted to settle all the questions and differences which have thus far arisen between them out of court and to place them entirely [94] into the hands of the aforesaid arbitrators, on condition that each party shall waive all right of exception or whatever may in any wise conflict with the full power of attorney given by him, under penalty if either of the principals should violate this agreement or object to the decision or award of the arbitrators of forfeiting the sum of seventy-five guilders to the poor; for the fulfilment of which they bind themselves according to law. But with this exception and reservation that if the authorized agents can not agree or compose the differences, that then all former judgments and writings regarding the aforesaid differences shall stand and remain intact. Ryck Rutgersz acknowledges his debt on folio 76 of the director's book, amounting to fl. 944, whereupon the director demands judgment against him, without prejudice to any further claims or right which Ryckgert may have.

The court orders Ryck Rutgersz, if he has any counter claims, to produce them within the space of fourteen days and after previous and proper inspection of them to liquidate accounts and furnish sufficient sureties for the payment, or else to go to debtor's prison.

This was read to Ryck Rutgersz.

Whereas Claes Cornelisz, being the servant and brother of Gysbert aende Berch, last year, on a Sunday, came to the house of the director and in a spiteful tone said that he "would get his pay" from Gysbert, even if the director and the gentlemen of the court were standing by, which actually did happen and can not be tolerated in a land of justice, the honorable plaintiff concludes that the guilty party is therefor in the highest degree liable to arbitrary punishment, as an example to others, irrespective of his right to recover what is due to him, all in conformity with the former ordinances and the plaintiff's duty, cum expensis.

Gysbert Cornelisz admits that he has taken some grain for his brother Claes and delivered it.

Gysbert acknowledges his indebtedness in the sum of fl. 1981, as per folio 44 of the director's book, but as to the fl. 540 for the number of morgens received he claims that it is sufficient for him to make restitution at the expiration of the lease according to appraisal.

[99] The court order Gysbert aenden Berch, if he has any counter claims to make with reference to the fl. 1981, or other accounts, to produce them without fail within eight days after this date and then after previous and proper examination to liquidate accounts and furnish sufficient sureties for the payment or go to debtor's prison.

It is decided that a copy of the director's complaint shall be handed to Cornelis Teunisz van Westbroeck to make answer thereto on next Thursday and to furnish sureties for the satisfaction of the judgment.

The director concludes that whereas Lucas, the brother-in-law of Jan Thomasz, and Aryen, the servant of Cornelis Vos, on the yacht of Willem Albertsz have beaten said Willem over the head till he bled, knocking off some pieces of skin, they have each forfeited the sum of fl. 25, for which they must give security.

It is resolved that the heavy cannon belonging to the honorable masters, being two in number and lying in the fort, shall from there be brought back to the colony.

It is agreed that Steven Jansz shall receive his wages at fl. 20 a month, clear, and that he shall not be charged for board at the places where he has worked.

Whereas Claes Cornelis, the brother of Gysbert aende Berch, in spite of the prohibition and arrest, has taken and appropriated to himself some grain, in contempt of this honorable court, and in addition has heretofore used these insulting words, namely, that "he would get it, even if the director and the other gentlemen were standing near," which is intolerable in a land of justice, he is condemned to pay a fine of fl. [], for which he is to furnish sureties, the ordinances remaining in force. Cum expensis.

Whereas Teunis Cornelisz at the aforesaid liquidation of accounts asks permission to pay the aforesaid sum in instalments, permission is granted him to pay the money promptly in three

The court having considered the complaint of the honorable director against Willem Albertsz, on the one side, and Lucas, the brother-in-law of Jan Thomasz, and Aryen, the servant of Cornelis Vos, on the other side, and heard the parties and the witnesses, have condemned Willem Albertsz and Lucas afore-said each to . . . 1 The petitioner's request for the lot and horse mill is granted.

Gysbert [aende Berch] is authorized to draw [logs] for the petitioner during eight days, but not to use any mares.

Upon the petition of Reyer Elbertsz, praying that he may be permitted to burn brick, it is decided to make the following apostil: The petitioner is granted permission to try if it will succeed, in which case a formal order on the subject will be made, but that the place, etc., will be shown him.

The honorable director having represented that Dirck Jansz is bound to submit to the court an invoice of the goods imported by him into the colony and the court finding that much trouble may arise from such importations, it is resolved and decided that Dirck aforesaid shall [be required to] take the burgher oath and that the house which was built by Harmen Bastiaensz and the said Dirck shall be transferred to Dirck's name, on condition that he enter into a contract and pay the duties to the honorable masters.

Likewise, the said Jochem, his wife and the members of the family are strictly enjoined from assaulting, molesting or troubling Jan van Hoesen or his family in any way by word or deed, under penalty of fifty guilders, in addition to the ordinary fine. The court messenger reports that according to his warrant he served the second and third peremptory summons on Jan van Bremen and Pieter Teunisz and that they accepted them, but replied that they could not appear on this day, [but would appear] a week from this date.

[105] Mr Johannes Dyckman, assisted by Master Abraham Staas, Jacob Jansz Stol, Jan Labatie and Pieter Ruerdingh, assistant, appearing after proper request for admittance, has handed in two placards, addressed to the Commander and those of the jurisdiction of Rensselaerswyck, one of the 27th and the other of the 29th of January 1652, and signed Andreas Johannis Christman, Clerk. Also an extract from the Resolution Book of the Hon. Director General and Council of New Netherland, of Monday, January 29 Anno 1652.

Also the answer to our request for restitution of the honorable masters' cannon, dated February 15, 1652, and signed Johannes Dyckman, Abram Staas and Jacob Jansz Hap.

Upon the petition of Thomas Sandersz it is decided as follows: For reasons set forth in the petition and in order to be accommodating the honorable court have upon his petition reduced the amount of the fine to thirty guilders.

Whereas the question between the honorable director and

Jan Thomasz has been pending in court for a long time and no response or decision has been received from [the honorable guardians in] the fatherland to whom the case was referred, the parties absolutely submit themselves to [the decision of] four arbitrators, of whom each side is to choose two, two to be taken from the court and two from outside the court, to whom they leave the matter completely.

The honorable director chooses from the court, Mons^r. J. B. v. Rensselaer, Mons^r. van Curler is chosen by them both. Jan Thomasz chooses from the court, Pieter Hartgers.

[105v] Court proceedings, February 22 Anno 1652

Also, a copy of the grant by their High Mightinesses to dispose of the fief [by will], dated February 5, Anno 1641.

Mr Dyckman having once more proposed the question whether we would consent and approve to have the aforesaid placards posted and published, the honorable director, in the name of the board, has answered: "In no wise, as long as I have a drop of blood in my body, unless you show me first an authorization from their High Mightinesses or our honorable masters."¹

Court proceedings, February 29 Anno 1652

Interrogatories drawn up for the examination of Gerardus van Wencom, Hendrick Jansz Reur and Jan Bastiaenz

The honorable director asks the above named persons whether they do not recollect having seen on the 8th of this month that when Mr Dyckman, accompanied by five persons and his assistant, appeared before the court, he brought with him into the middle part of the house three soldiers, who were fully armed, namely, with their side arms, two carrying muskets with lighted fuses and one carrying a snaphance?

The deponents jointly declare as stated in the foregoing article.

Director Slichtenhorst protests and complains of violence committed by Mr Dyckman's soldiers on New Year's eve in having several times, contrary to the ordinance, shot burning fuses on the roof of the patroon's house and also on the house of the director, which is covered with thatch, so that the fore part of the house seemed ablaze and the director's son, in the intense cold, was moved to spring naked out of bed to extinguish several papers, and having therefore endangered not only the honorable masters' house, property and papers, but more particularly some people's lives. . . . [about two lines destroyed].

[106v] Secondly, the aforesaid director complains and protests about great and notorious violence and maltreatment received by his son on New Year's day last past at the hands of Mr Dyckman and his soldiers, who suddenly grabbed him by the hair and at the same time struck him on the forehead so that he fell down and in the presence of the aforesaid Dyckman not only beat him black and blue, but dragged him through the mud and mire and treated him inhumanly as if he were a criminal, yes, struck his children with their guns and threatened to shoot them, but were prevented from doing so. And that without any reason or occasion therefor in the least, so that from this cruel abuse of power a massacre might easily have resulted. And he, Dyckman, encouraged his soldiers in their evil work, while they thus inhumanly treated the director's son and his children, by calling out aloud: "Beat him now and may the devil take him!"¹

Likewise, the aforesaid director complains and protests about violence committed by Mr Dyckman in coming on the 8th of February 1652 with his six persons and three soldiers, armed with guns with lighted match and side arms, at the time that the court was in session, into the house of the honorable masters and into another man's jurisdiction, of which the director was informed and had knowledge only after the court had adjourned. And whereas no one has a right to enter another's jurisdiction by force of arms [107] except with the previous consent of the officer or the commissioners of the court, this tends not only to the disparagement of the court, but also of the authority of our supreme government, which is likewise represented here.

Furthermore, the director complains and protests against the insults offered by Mr Dyckman on the 8th ditto in bringing his assistant and the aforesaid persons into the court and ordering him to sit down at the table and to make a note of everything that he, Dyckman, proposed, against which Director Slichtenhorst expressly protested, refusing to suffer it in any way and ordering him to get out, as he did. And afterwards, the aforesaid Dyckman again made him come in, against the aforesaid protest and the order of the director, so that violence prevailed over justice.

Information taken by the director about Claesje, a negress, being the slave of Sander Leendersz, accused of theft.

She declares that she stole the following goods from her master and gave them to the following persons:

To Jan Michielsz

He gave her an old undershirt and promised her a new one and a cap with lace.

Two white blankets, taken by him from the garret

1 bundle of bar lead, which he took himself out of the cellar

2 bundles of combs, taken by him from the room

Catalyn Sanders denies that she loaned any candles to him and adds that he said that the negress stole them from her and brought them to her.

3 or 4 candles
Again 6 candles } He admits this, but says twice three, which she brought him.

The negress declares that Jan Michielsz drew his knife and forced her to give him the lead and also asked for mackerel and beef.

Also to Jacob Luyersz, as follows:

She also declares that with tears in his eyes and folded hands he begged her two or three times, saying: "My dear Catalyntje, forgive me the wrong I have done you."

He also prayed de Hoges to come sometime to console him, as at times he had a hard struggle and suffered great temptations. This took place at the house of Jan Verbeeck ... house, on a ... afternoon ... [five or six words destroyed].

3 yards of red cloth. He promised to take her to the Manhatans and that she would then get a husband.

1 tub of butter, taken by him, saying that he bought it from her master, adding: "Your mistress knows about it."

8 bars of lead

Also a handkerchief full of butter, fetched by him on condition that she should take it to the Manhatans.

Whereas Johannes Dyckman, commissary of Fort Orange, and his adherents by forcible means have ventured to enter the jurisdiction of the colony of Rensselaerswyck and to erect [three] several boundary posts, without serving notice thereof on the court, the court messenger is ordered to demand in the presence of the accompanying witnesses [110] by what order and authority Mr Dyckman has undertaken to commit this trespass on the colony. And in default of any authority from their High Mightinesses, we are in honor and by virtue of our oath, in the name of our honorable masters, bound to have the said posts removed and taken away from their places, protesting before God Almighty and their High Mightinesses aforesaid against the trespass and public violence that has been committed and demanding reparation of all loss and damage and calamities which have already resulted or may hereafter result therefrom.

Thirdly, an answer to the positive questions of March 16 and 18, 1652.

Extraordinary sessions, March 22 Anno 1652

By the director the following were summoned to appear before the court:

Sander Leendersz

Catalyn Donckesz, his wife

Egbert Dojesz, their servant

Catalyn and Egbert declare that Commissary Dyckman on March 21, [1652], came to the house of Sander Leendersz and asked whether the [negress was] theirs? Answered, Yes. Whereupon he answered: "[She must go with me to the Fort; she has slandered [honest] people and the case is not [being prosecuted.”] Catalyn replied: “Not without the consent of my husband.” The commissary said: “I shall make her come and have soldiers get her.” Thereupon Sander [111] was asked to come home by his servant, being at that time at the house of Willem Fredericksz. Coming home, Sander Leendersz asked Commissary Dyckman what he wanted? He said he wished to take the negress with him. Sander Leendersz asked: “For what reason?” The commissary replied: “Because she has slandered honest people and the case is not prosecuted.” Sander Leendersz said: “Mons^r. Dyckman, not this evening, but come to-morrow, we shall then see what we can do.” Whereupon Mons^r. Dyckman angrily replied: “If you refuse me, I have the power to take you and your wife and your whole family and to ruin your house and to shoot it to pieces, for you dwell on the Company’s ground.” Whereupon Sander answered: “I have nothing to do with you; I can not give allegiance to another lord before I am released from the first.” The commissary said: “Wait, wait, until Mr Stuyvesant comes up the river; then I will teach you differently.” Sander replied: “When Mr Stuyvesant comes up the river, I may perhaps have as much right as you have.” Whereupon the commissary drew his rapier and threatened to run said Sander through, so that Sander in defending himself was stabbed. Thereupon the commissary went to the fort. Sander Leendersz declares also that the same day he was by order of Commissary Dyckman summoned by Huybert de [Guyt] to come to the fort [111v]. On entering the fort, Sander Leendersz said: “Good morning Mons^r. Dyckman, what is your pleasure?” Whereupon he answered: “I arrest you here in the fort. I understand that you have two commissions.” Sander replied: “That is true, in fact, I have three of them, one from Mr Kieft, deceased, one from Mr Stuyvesant and one from the honorable masters of the colony.” They jointly declare by true words and handshaking with the honorable director, instead of an oath, that all this took place as stated. Dated as above.

March 25 Anno 1652

Philip Pietersz Scheuller declares that Mr Dyckman said to him on the 20th of this month that when Mr Stuyvesant came up the river and he did not care to see it,¹ he should see to it that he was not present, or go down the river. And Philip Pietersz asking: Why?, he replied that he would not have his father-in-law very long and that he, Dyckman, had written information to that effect.

Philip Pietersz Scheuller and Robert Vasterick declare that it occurred on New Year's day, 1652, that when, as more fully stated before, a soldier was scandalously beating the honorable director's son² and dragging him over the ground in the fort and they, the deponents, as far as they could were trying to prevent it, the commissary [112] threatened to run them through if they dared to interfere.

Catalyn Donckesz declares that Mr Dyckman, on the 21st of this month, said to her at her house that a gallows was being built for three persons and that upon her query for whom, he replied: "For Mr Slichtenhorst, his son and J. B. van Rensselaer."

They, [the deponents], by handshake and true words, instead of an oath, have severally declared that the above took place as stated.

Which I certify,

A. DE HOOGES, Secretary

March 30 Anno 1652

The honorable director states that he and his son went this morning with the order granted [by the court] to the house of Cornelis Segersz to receive the outstanding debt due to the honorable masters, but that Cornelis Segersz refused to deliver it, yes, what is more, that the loft door was nailed tight, about which the honorable director highly complains and protests.

¹ Meaning, the arrest, or execution, of Director van Slichtenhorst, Schuyler's father-in-law.

² Gerrit van Slichtenhorst.

[112v] Extraordinary session, March 30 Anno 1652

This date

in court.

Whereas Director Slichtenhorst by virtue of his office and his oath, upon a warrant and order from the honorable commissioners went this morning with his people to the house of Cornelis Segersz to get a little grain from the defendant's loft in part payment of his large debt, offering to give the defendant an acquittance therefor, and the said defendant, contrary to the order, refused to deliver the grain to the plaintiff and nailed the loft door tight, so that the plaintiff was not master of his promised grain and own ground and the defendant obeyed others more than his lawful authorities, wholly contrary to the oath taken by him; therefore, the plaintiff demands that the defendant shall not only be condemned to deliver his threshed grain within twice 24 hours on the plaintiff's loft, as is customary, but that the defendant shall remain under arrest until such time as the defendant has delivered to the plaintiff the threshed and unthreshed grain, and that in addition he shall be arbitrarily punished as an example to others. All cum expensis of this extraordinary session, of which the defendant is the sole cause, having treated the order of the honorable court with contempt.

[113] Cornelis Segersz is hereby ordered by the court within the space of four days after this date to remove and bring one hundred and fifty schepels of wheat to the loft of Gysbert Cornelisz from Weesp, under penalty of ten guilders for each day that he remains in default. And the aforesaid grain is to remain at the place aforesaid until the accounts on both sides shall have been delivered and judgment in the matter shall have been pronounced by the court.

April 1, 1652, Sergeant Daniel Litschoo came by order of Mr Stuyvesant into the house of the honorable masters, leaving 14 armed soldiers standing before the door, and asked Slichtenhorst whether he was willing to take down the flag? Whereupon Slichtenhorst answered, No, and that he had nothing to say here, unless he first showed authority from our honorable masters and their High Mightinesses. The sergeant replied: "Then I shall get it." Against which Slichtenhorst strongly protested.

Likewise it appears that the sergeant and his 14 soldiers, armed with loaded muskets, when they were outside the yard, fired out of spite not only within the jurisdiction of the colony, but also came within the enclosed place of the honorable masters and by force hauled down the flag from the staff, against the will and consent of the director.

[113v] April 9, 1652

In accordance with the preceding resolution it is again resolved that the honorable director, according to the account in Ledger No. F, folio 12, shall pay to Adriaen Huybertsz three hundred and thirty-four guilders, fifteen and a half stivers, (fl. 334-15-8).

¹ According to E. B. O'Callaghan, History of New Netherland, 2:183 and J. R. Brodhead, History of the State of New York, 1:535, this placard was issued by General Stuyvesant while on a visit to Fort Orange and contained a proclamation erecting in Fort Orange a Court of Justice for the village of Beverwyck and its dependencies, apart from, and independent of, that of Rensselaerswyck. The text of this proclamation has not been preserved, but it is likely that it was the same proclamation as that which under date of April 15 is referred to as having been drawn up by the director general and council of New Netherland on the 8th of that month. The minutes of the court of Fort Orange and Beverwyck show that the members of the newly created court took the oath on April 10, 1652, and that the first session of the court was held on April 15, the very date of the last entry in the record of the court of the colony of Rensselaerswyck presided over by Van Slichtenhorst.

APPENDIX

The following inventory of effects taken at the house of Brant Aertsz van Slichtenhorst in 1652, and the debit and credit account of his administration of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, 1648-1650, form part of the documents which were submitted by Van Slichtenhorst as exhibits in his suit against Johan van Rensselaer and the copartners of the colony. They are bound at the beginning of a volume of about 300 pages, marked: "N 15.3.^a Renselaer C^a. V. Both documents are printed in Dutch as appendices XI and XII to Mr G. Beernink's biography of Dr Arend van Slichtenhorst and his father Brant van Slichtenhorst, which forms No. 12 of the Werken of the historical society "Gelre."

Whereas the seawan was reduced in value at the Manhatans, to wit, from six to eight [beads] for one stiver, I stated in a memorial to the honorable court that, as I had a considerable quantity on hand, I could not afford the loss. Being asked for information in regard to the above account, Arent van Curler wrote on September 1, 1659, to Johan van Rensselaer as follows:¹

Dear Sir and worthy cousin:

Salute! There being a time for everything, this opportunity presents itself, which I do not wish to let pass. As to Slichten-horst, of whom your honor writes that he obtained a judgment for some thousands on the basis of the account of about 13,000 guilders which the late De Hoges and I are said to have signed, I think it is true that we signed it, but that we approved it, non credo. Why is no attention paid to our way of signing it?

Owing to the length of time that has passed, I have forgotten the circumstances, but (under correction) it seems to me

¹The Dutch text of the letter is printed on p. 245-46 of Mr. Beer-nink's biography of Van Slichtenhorst.

and my recollection is that we examined the accounts and the vouchers and found the receipts to be so much and the disbursements so much, but as to having signed, approved and ratified the same, I trust we did not, as the commission of the commissioners gives them power to examine and discuss the director's accounts provisionally, but the approval must come from the patroon and the co-directors.

Miinheer, mon cousin,

Your willing cousin and servant,

Was signed:

A. van Curler
